Winery Raided

Feds Swoop In, Arrest Owner, Winemaker. Painting Was for Sale

By Dan Rattiner

As you probably know, three weeks ago, the new commissioner of the New York State Liquor Authority, Joshua Toas, announced a crackdown on the selling of art at the wineries of eastern Long Island. Selling paintings is not on the list of approved activities authorized by the SLA at wineries. The SLA would henceforth be on the lookout for violations.

There was considerable concern among winery owners about the announcement. Two wineries on the North Fork which had art work displayed on their walls took them down as a precaution. But now the SLA has struck.

The victim was Dr. Albert Gonzales, a wealthy neurosurgeon in Manhattan who just two weeks ago opened his 450-acre Alberto Winery in Mattituck to great fanfare. He is currently in the Riverhead Jail, his winery closed down awaiting arraignment. We went there and met with him in the visitor's room.

"It was very sudden," he said. "It happened on Saturday evening just before closing. We were packed with people curious about us as the new kid in town. I can hardly believe it."

According to Gonzales, the people from the SLA came down on ropes from helicopters hovering above the new winery building. He described what happened.

"We had about eighty people. They had just concluded a tour and were tasting some of our wines in the main tasting room. One man, I did not know who he was, asked me about the single painting we had hanging over the fireplace. I told him it had been lent to us by a local artist in Orient who does still lifes. This was a painting of a vase of red roses. What could be wrong with roses?"

Five times a year, there could be a poetry reading or classical music concert on the property. And that was it.

"So I told him about it, and he asked me if it was for sale. I had heard of the warning about selling art, of course, so I told him that I couldn't sell it, not only because of the law but because I didn't own it, but there was nothing to prevent him from calling the artist, and he asked me the name and I told him, Leonora Baddy, and I gave him her phone number, and then the roof fell in. All the lights went out.

And the next thing I know I was in handcuffs, and by flashlight I was being led out through all this confusion of people trying to get out of the building, to a paddy wagon along with my winemaker, Fritz Handfrooker. I don't remember much after that. Fritz is in another cellblock from this one so I don't get to see him. He was unbelievably upset."

* * *

If Handfrooker and Gonzales are in Riverhead, Mrs. Baddy, it turns out, is in the Women's House of Correction in Selden. We were unable to interview her before press time.

According to the office of the SLA, the man talking to Dr. Gonzales was Agent Roger Armsburger, a recent addition to the staff. Trained in anti-terrorism and surveillance, he and a dozen other men have been hired by Mr. Toas, beefing up the staff and enabling them to enhance their enforcement efforts. The team is led by James Silver, formerly of the CIA.

Mr. Toas, who has been in office for less than a month, did not return our phone calls, but an aide to the new commissioner, who asked that we not use his name, spoke to us off the record. He said that many people are unhappy about how Mr. Toas is going about things, but as Toas

In what can only be called a pride-swallowing move, Howard Stern is calling upon his arch nemesis, the FCC, for help. Since his debut on subscriber-only Sirius satellite radio, Stern's show has been heard intermittently on pirate radio stations in New York and New Jersey, and the FCC is in charge of hunting down the guilty parties. But the pirates may be the least of Stern's problems. Every episode of his radio show can be easily downloaded on the internet via file sharing programs.

Steven Spielberg's "Munich" opened in Israel recently to not very much fanfare at all. Israeli critics stayed away from critiquing the film's political message and focused instead on the cinematic aspects of the movie, which, in general, they found long and boring. One critic went so far as to call the film, and Mr. Spielberg's direction, "slovenly."

Mr. Icahn recently recruited Mr. Biondi, who was formerly the CEO of Viacom and Universal Studios, for this post. A successful Time Warner takeover would be good news for Icahn whose bid for a partial takeover of Fairmont Hotels and Resorts was recently rejected.

explained to them, the law is the law. It's intention, when originally put on the books, was to see to it that wineries, which were sprouting up all over the East End — this was twenty years ago — did not become nightspots or restaurants or retail establishments that could compete with other such businesses in the area. For one thing, the wineries were not zoned for this. For another, many of them were off in rural areas with private residences nearby. You couldn't be having rock concerts, for example, on the winery grounds. And so the law was passed to limit these activities to include only the tastings of wine and the selling of sealed bottles of same, the selling of souvenirs and paraphernalia about the winery and about the new wine district, and the selling of souvenirs and paraphernalia about tourism in the State of New York, with the slogan "I Love New York." Bottle openers, for example. It was also allowed that, five times a year, there be a poetry reading or classical music concert on the property. And that was it. Nothing about selling art.

Agents of the SLA have been in the area for two of the last three weeks, looking for any violations of the law, this employee exclusively told Dan's Papers. And this was the first instance of the crackdown. The agent on the premises was wearing a bug strapped to his chest under his suit. Dr. Gonzales' reply was relayed to the SWAT team up at the Mattituck Airport where three helicopters waited. And in less than thirty seconds, they were hovering over the scene. At a signal from below — a phone call had been made to Mrs. Baddy and she had agreed to consider selling the painting — the agents cut the wires at the utility pole outside, the men rappelled down and came in through the windows and down the chimney, and the local police were called. When they arrived, Dr. Gonzales and his wine maker were hustled off over the tearful objections of their families and, shortly thereafter, Mrs. Baddy was arrested.

Dan's Papers spoke after our interview with Dr. Gonzales with Bill Peckham, a Fifth Avenue lawyer who is representing Dr. Gonzales.

"We believe Dr. Gonzales is innocent," he said. "He did not directly offer the painting up for sale. As a matter of fact, he specifically denied the painting was for sale. If there was to be a sale, and we deny that there was a sale, there is no doubt that it was taking place in Orient with Mrs. Baddy at her home. She should have known better than to suggest she might sell a painting that was located in a winery. The existence of the new crackdown is quite well known."

Dr. Gonzales will be arraigned in the State Supreme Court in Riverhead on charges of aiding and abetting the sale of a painting at a winery in the State of New York, and if convicted could be sentenced to up to five years in jail. He could also lose his license to have a winery. The arraignment took place on Wednesday, which was after we went to press, so we don't yet know if bail was set and if he or the wine maker had been released.

"I've had to postpone two surgeries so far," Dr. Gonzales told us on Tuesday at our interview. "I'm sure they will allow bail. I have three neurosurgeries in Manhattan on Friday." •

Class Distinctions

Upper Class Brit Takes Umbrage at the Behavior of an American

By Dan Rattiner

Captain Harvey Bennett, who runs Moon Pie the charter fishing boat out of Montauk, has amused himself from time to time during his fishing trips by putting a note in a bottle and throwing it overboard. He's received replies in the past from people in Orient Point, Atlantic City and other nearby places, and sometimes the people who find his messages bobbing in the sea or washing up on the shore send him a letter. He encloses his address.

It is fair to say, however, that nothing compares to the response that recently arrived in the mail from one particular bottle that Captain Bennett dropped overboard off Napeague last summer. What the finder wrote is a testament to the class structure in England at not only the present time, but also from the time when the early Bennetts came over from the old country as part of the first wave of settlers in the 1640s.

First of all, amazingly, it should be noted that this particular bottle traveled out into the Atlantic beyond the coastal Atlantic waters, got itself caught up in the Gulf Stream, and bobbed along out across the sea to wash up on a shore in England. Not only that, it washed up on a shore at Poole Harbor, an upscale beach resort where many upper class English people have vacation homes, and which is just twenty miles away from Weymouth Harbor, the blue collar community where Bennett's ancestors lived nearly four hundred years ago.

It is important to remember how the Bennetts and the Millers and the other members of a working class group who call themselves Bonackers came to the Hamptons from this section of England known as Dorset. Some came as servants to the English Aristocracy Gardiner's Island, is a section and bay beach we call Fireplace. The workmen on the Island would build a bonfire on the beach to indicate they would like a supply boat to come across. The workmen at Fireplace would build a bonfire to signal that they got the message. In 1644, the first Bennetts came here. This family has been a First Family of East Hampton, with its members serving with distinction in many Town Governments. Many served in the two World Wars. Others became physicians or scientists.

In any case, this bottle washed up at Poole Harbor. And there, it was picked up by a gentleman by the name of Henry Bigglesworth. Apparently recognizing the supposedly lower status occupied by the family "Bennett," many of whom remained in Weymouth Harbor and other parts of Dorset — there are Bennetts buried in church cemeteries in the area —

he took pen in hand and dashed off this missive to Mr. Bennett in Springs, Long Island, New York. The quotes around the word "Captain" are from the writer.

Dear "Captain" Bennett:

"I recently found your bottle while taking a scenic walk on the beach by Poole Harbor. While you may consider this some profound experiment on the path and speed of oceanic

Nothing compares to the response that arrived in the mail from one particular bottle that Captain Bennett dropped overboard off Napeague settling America, or they came as the ship's crew. Others came as the fishermen, baymen or farmers they had been at home to raise families in similar circumstances in the New World. For example, the first English settler to set foot on what is now New York State was Lion Gardiner. He came in 1639 with his wife, children and servants, to settle what is today known as Gardiner's Island just offshore Amagansett. In the Springs, within sight of currents, I have another name for it, litter. You Americans don't seem to be happy unless you are mucking about somewhere. If you wish to foul your own nest all well and good, but please refrain in future from fouling mine.

"Sincerely,

"Henry Biggelsworth."

Is it possible that "Henry Biggelsworth" is a made up name? That this is all a hoax by some young prankster? Or that that there really is a Mr. Biggelsworth who really is just concerned with the environment?

Ron Parker is the cabinet member of the Poole Council who has charge of tourism in that borough. The name Biggelsworth did not ring a bell with him.

"We are a friendly resort which attracts many international visitors every year and they will always receive a warm welcome here in Poole," he said. "We have a long association with our American friends in particular dating from the Second World War when the American Coast Guard was stationed here and the associations with the D-Day landings, not to mention the town's close links with Newfoundland."

Reporters in England who contacted Bennett about this story asked how he got his captain's license, were told "by the Coast Guard" and therefore deduced, incorrectly, that he was a Coastguardsman. The word spread.

Long live the English. And God Save the Queen.

"As if the Brits didn't 'muck about' for a few centuries in every corner of the globe. Mr. Bigglesworth, we'll be sure to remember your views the next time your starving island needs to be rescued. Then you can complain again about Lend/Lease and how we charged you for the ships you needed to feed and arm yourselves. After all it's not as if anyone in the US wanted to help you out in the last 2 wars. Just what was it that we owed you that we shouldn't have leased you on those ships. What had Britain ever done for us besides be a pain in the ass."

The Bank & Café. How About a Bakery & Plumbing Store?

By Dan Rattiner

This coming Wednesday, the Bridgehampton National Bank together with the Hampton Coffee Company will open a Bank Café at 194 Mill Road in Westhampton Beach. I'm not sure if you understand this exactly.

I understand it, because I've been in such a thing. The old Grace's Hot Dog stand in Manorville reopened last year as a joint venture of the North Fork Bank and Starbucks. I have an account at North Fork, and I tried to make a deposit at the window there the other day. I'd never been to that branch. I drove up to the window and held out my $942 cash deposit and the woman told me I'd have to take it inside. You only got coffee at the window. Another time, around 9 p.m., I went into the main entrance on the side where the Starbucks is. I bought a coffee, then went over to cash a check at the place where you do the banking — the two areas are pretty clearly defined — and they lowered a gate of metal bars behind me.

"We're closing up," the teller said. "But I'll cash your check. Then we'll raise the gate and let you back out of here."

On the other side of the gate, through the bars, I could see people still in line to get coffee. Starbucks would remain open until 11. But the money at North Fork would be behind bars. They completed my transaction. Then they raised the bars and let me out. Whew.

It's a weird thing to have two different businesses in one location sharing the place. But it works. I think. Years ago, when I was in college, I got this idea of having a florist shop merge with a café. But I did not have in mind a coffee café. You could buy only water. Bottled water from around the world. Served to you at a café table, ceremonially poured into crystal glasses by a uniformed waiter while in the background a string quartet, among the flowers, played something by Mozart. During the performance, a woman would walk by with a pruning scissors.

DO IT AGAIN AND I'LL CUT YOUR EAR OFF

By Dan Rattiner

The Muslim reaction to the publication of an offensive cartoon in a European newspaper should be a lesson to us. In the rest of the world, the spread of Democracy and western ways has not been much of a problem. Even in such places as Japan and China, which have civilizations far more ancient than our own, the world of prosperity, commerce, freedom and entertainment have taken hold with relative ease. One can joke about almost anything. It's a good laugh meant all in fun and underlying it lies the acknowledgement of a respect for our differences. Even our religious difference.

Especially our religious differences. ("A priest, a minister and a rabbi are on an airplane going down.....")

Western values are now spreading through the Muslim world though, and Islamic leaders are far less amenable to their spread. Really. People will die if jokes are made about Muhammad. Or his picture is drawn. Or other things are done that the rest of the world doesn't even know about, but are written in the Koran. Read it and you will find out what they are.

As you know, a Danish newspaper two weeks ago published a cartoon of Muhammad wearing a turban shaped like a bomb. There were several other cartoons of him. In the Arab world, buildings were set on fire and angry mobs demonstrated. A boycott was begun against the purchase of anything from Denmark. Back in Europe, the publisher of the Danish newspaper first said that this was a challenge to freedom of the press. He didn't see where he had done anything wrong. But then, when the demonstrations spread, he said he could see where some might be offended and he apologized. The Prime Minister of Denmark, however, did not apologize. He said

I don't know how all this works with the bureaucrats in the zoning departments, but it's got me thinking.

I could see Libert's Barber Shop in East Hampton opening a retail store with the Southampton Inn. It could be in Bridgehampton on Main Street. Go there and you get a haircut in a barber's chair, but you could also sleep in that chair for the night. They'd have a night manager at a desk by the front door after Frank went home. Call it Libert's Barber Shop and Inn.

How about a combination of Hildreth's Department Store and Midas Muffler and Brake. Drive your car in, and while they take it up on the lift for a lube and brake pad replacement, you could shop for a sofa. Hildreth's Lube and Furniture.

Along those same lines, how about a combination of Southampton Tire and McDonald's? Hell, the two places are right next door to one another on North Sea Road anyway. Just put a roof over both of them. McDonald's Tire and Cheeseburgers.

How about Starlanes Bowling in East Hampton and Starr Boggs Restaurant in Westhampton Beach opening a bowlerama bistro in Southampton?

I have another idea. How about Hampton Jitney's Main Terminal bus stop in Southampton combining with Janet O'Brien Caterers and Café and the Omni Health and Racquetball. While waiting for a Jitney bus, you could watch people play racquetball while sipping a cappuccino. Wait. They're already doing that.

too it was a matter of freedoms. And in France, Germany and other countries, other newspaper publishers published the same cartoons to show their solidarity.

The results of this were attacks on western embassies and missions. In the West Bank, demonstrators said that diplomats at a German mission would be kidnapped if they didn't leave immediately. They left. And when demonstrations continued, the Europeans backed down. Editors were fired. Apologies made. And then there was rioting in Afghanistan and Syria and several people died. Here in the United States, President Bush said he thought publishing anything that would offend one religion or another was wrong.

One can make the argument that in every culture there are religious extremists. And it is surely true. But nowhere are there reactions such as this. People might object vigorously to something. But they don't threaten to kill you. Or actually do kill you or maim you. In places where strict Islam laws are adhered to, the punishment for theft is to chop off your hand.

Doesn't anybody remember that in 1983 when Salman Rushdie wrote a book that a leader of Islam declared offensive to the religion, the sentence was death? It was never carried out, but he spent years in hiding, so we don't know if the authorities were just good in protecting him or nobody wanted to try for the eternal life in heaven that beckoned for the killer.

It would be an understatement to say that close followers of Islam are having a hard time accepting the globalization of the western way of life. As Mr. Bush and others have said, this is one world and we have a world economy. It may include people who worship God through other religions (Buddhism, Taoism and

Waiting to Strike Gold on the Main Streets of the Hamptons

By David Lion Rattiner

When you walk down Main Street in East Hampton or Hill Street in Southampton, one of the things you notice are certain empty stores with signs in the windows that read "Retail Space Available." As there are several of these, you almost think that "Retail Space Available" is this great business that is opening up stores all over the Hamptons the way Starbucks opened up stores in New York City. But that is not the case. "Retail Space Available" is just a waiting game. The landlord is not waiting for a guy to come along with a good business idea, he is waiting for a guy who has, in a weird way, a bad business idea, but can afford to pay for the high rent. In other words, the landlords of these empty spaces are fishing, waiting for a super rich somebody who wants to open up a regular store, such as a clothing store, but doesn't care about the whole profit thing. Needless to say, these people come few and far between. And so, the landlords put up sign in the windows and like any fisherman, wait.

If you didn't know better, you'd think it was kind of sad to see these signs. You'd think there might be some poor guy who thought he had a good business idea, went through all the trouble to open a store only to have it come to an end and then move out.

Increasing rent prices are nothing new out here, but when the itch to fish strikes, some stores that have been around for over ten years are simply priced out of their shops. The store owners head to a new location that is less expensive somewhere else in town, while others decide to simply close up shop altogether.

There is a space in Southampton that has been vacant for the past three years. It is near the corner of Windmill Lane, where the surf shop, Sunrise To Sunset was for twenty years. Business owners near the storefront are complaining to the town about the space being empty for so long. An adjacent empty storefront negatively affects the business around it

JUDGE UPHOLDS BOARD OF E.H. SYNAGOGUE

By Dan Rattiner

In late December, members of the congregation of the Jewish Center of the Hamptons met in East Hampton and voted three things. They voted to renew Rabbi David Gelfand's contract. They voted to fire the 21 member Board who had said they would not renew it. And they voted in a new Board.

Now a State judge has ruled on the legality of this vote, essentially interpreting the charter of this non-profit institution for those involved. State Supreme Court Justice Ralph R. Costello decided that according to the charter, the Center is under the control of the current board of directors, that this board cannot be removed en masse by the congregation, and if the current board chooses not to renew the contract of the rabbi, which expires this June and which they tentatively voted 19 to 2 not to renew, they have every right to do so. The congregation only has the right to approve or disapprove of any new rabbi that the Board hopes to hire. And who that might be, for the period beginning June 2006, remains to be seen.

Thus, barring a successful appeal of this ruling, will end the struggle to determine the fate of Rabbi Gelfand. The battle has gone on for almost a year, and in spite of attempts to keep it contained and within the privacy of this religious institution, its ebbs and flows have been widely reported in the press. The Jewish Center is home to some of the richest men and women in America.

The confrontation with the rabbi came about almost a year ago over a very small matter. The rabbi is free to charge for his services outside of the synagogue, an income he may keep in addition to his annual salary. An exception to this is if he performs a service for a member of the congregation. Any money he is given needs to be donated to the center.

because foot traffic is lost.

But with the fishing game in mind, it is not tough to figure out why a landlord would rather have an empty store with no paying tenants for three years than a store with paying tenants on one of the busiest streets in Southampton. Make an offer.

The twist of all this is that even the big guns, the corporations, sometimes can't make the rent. I have spoken to managers (I won't name names) of some of the big name stores throughout the towns and all of the ones I have spoken to have told me that the business operates at a loss because of the rent. "The owners want their name out in the Hamptons," they'll say. It's an image thing.

Sometimes, you can buy a store from a landlord, but it is going to cost you one pretty penny. Take Paul McCartney, for example. The rock star has reportedly paid over eight million dollars for the One Main Street building in East Hampton. The plan, they say, is to have his daughter Stella open up her third clothing store there. She already has one in New York City and one in London. It is going to be one heck of a store when it opens and the possibility of it closing after one year due to a rent increase is non-existent.

Some landlords are keeping the rents reasonable because they, like the store owners that rent from them, know what they can afford and cannot. So not all of the mom and pop stores are heading out of town. But the trend is in that direction.

If more Paul McCartneys bought all the stores in the villages for astronomical prices, then offered reasonable rents, you could see more mom and pops. Of course, the mom and pops would still hope that they wouldn't raise the rent.

According to the Board, in early April of last year, the rabbi performed such a service, received payment himself and then wrote a check to the center. A thank you was sent to the congregant, and in the course of things, almost in passing, the congregant noted the amount he had paid the rabbi. It was more than the rabbi had given the center.

The rabbi, questioned about this, according to the board, declined to show any records of what he had personally received from this congregant.

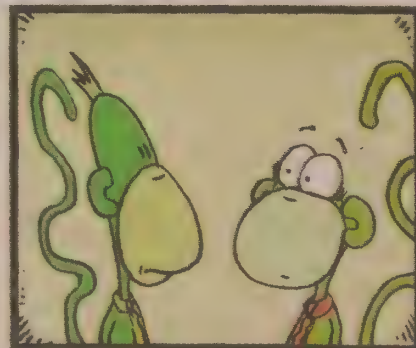

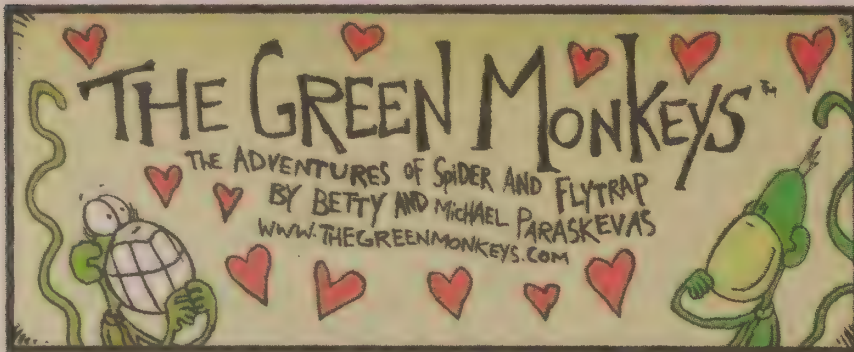

But he vigorously denied wrongdoing. And he insisted that his denial, on the face of it, was all that was necessary. The board, alarmed, pressed the case. The rabbi would not budge. Instead, he went to the congregation as a whole and asked them to rally around him and show their support. This they happily did at a meeting last August. He is a very popular rabbi.

Other matters surfaced about the rabbi's behavior. Among other things, according to the Board, the rabbi gave inaccurate information about his dealings with a synagogue in Argentina. The rabbi said he personally had donated $1,600 to it. Seeking reimbursement, he had submitted a thank you from the Argentina synagogue, but it was for $600. Someone had inserted the number 1 to make it look like a thank you for $1,600. Explainable? Maybe so. But the rabbi never offered an explanation.

In June of last year, the Board took a vote to see how they felt about the rabbi's contract,

Could Steel Worker Pensioners Take Over the Rennert Mansion?

By Dan Rattiner

When Ira Rennert first got the approvals to build his massive fortress of a home in Sagaponack, there were those who said it was not really going to be a home — it was going to be something else. A hotel. Or a religious school. The home, which subsequently took seven years to build, is today more than 100,000 square feet in size, with parking for 55 cars, with bedrooms for up to 58 guests, and with nearly every amenity that about $185,000,000 can bring to what was once a potato field between Peter's Pond Lane and Fairfield Lane.

Turns out it was indeed intended as a house.

And Mr. Rennert and his family are living in it today. So much for the naysayers.

It is fair to ask, however, what in the world is going to become of this great oceanfront residence when the money runs out. Last week, we got a hint. And it is astonishingly reminiscent of what did befall a grand estate in Southampton fifty years ago.

That 30,000 square foot estate, built by Charles H. Sabin for his family in 1919, went for several generations by the name of "Bayberryland." But when the money ran out, it had to be sold off. And nobody could afford it. Instead, it fell into the hands of the 433rd United Electrical Workers Union, who put a great curved sign over the entranceway on Sebonac Road with the word BAYBERRYLAND on it, and ran it as a resort and retreat for the deserving membership. Electricians came from all over. And there were sometimes 50 or 100 of them on the premises at one time.

One might not see hundreds of electricians out at the Rennert Mansion some day. But there is at least a remote possibility that there might be vacationing steel workers.

This past Monday, a federal agency called the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation reportedly placed a lien against the Rennert Mansion. It's not a little lien. It's a $189 mil-

TOXIC COAL TAR TO BE DUG UP IN SAG HARBOR

By David Stoll

Will pumping one million gallons of water into Sag Harbor Cove each day over a several months' period affect the area's ecosystem? That was the principal question posed during a sometimes contentious public meeting held by the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) on Monday evening to discuss its proposed "Remedial Action Plan" for the site occupied by the familiar giant blue globe. Well attended, this second meeting to discuss the proposal was called because few people had been aware of the first. By the end of the two-and-one-half hour meeting, it seemed that residents and local representatives were not convinced by the DEC's repeated statements that the amount of water is merely a drop in the bucket.

Until a few weeks ago, that giant blue globe, called a Hortonsphere, was operated by KeySpan Energy as part of a natural gas holding and delivery system. That is not a problem, but during the 1800s and early 1900s the site was used as a Manufactured Gas Plant (MGP). Common in the days before electricity, MGPs were used to make the gas that lit the streets and people's homes. The process involved converting coal and oil into gas, which left an oily liquid called "coal tar" as a byproduct. Coal tar, like all petroleum products, contains benzene and related compounds, which can be harmful to people and the environment in large enough quantities. Quite a bit of this coal tar seeped into the ground and can move with the groundwater.

For several years KeySpan, under direct supervision of the DEC, has conducted tests on the site and in the surrounding areas, including basements and crawl spaces. While coal tar has moved underground beyond the KeySpan lion lien. What has happened is that Mr. Rennert in his business dealings has taken out of bankruptcy a steel company with a large overhanging pension for retired workers, tried to restore it as a going concern by raising about $300 million of investment money for it, failed, and retreated with it back into bankruptcy. At this point, it is believed that the only option possible for the investors is to jettison the earned pensions of the workers, and then sell it off cheap to somebody new.

Those that work for Rennert deny that this is the plan. But the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation (PBGC), this government agency that would take over and be responsible for a jettisoned pension, is taking no chances. Why should the taxpayers foot the bill? Ira Rennert's company profited by over $100 million when all the investors came in. (It was the amount paid for putting the deal together.) And Rennert has this giant house that's been appraised at $185 million. Isn't that a coincidence. Let us put a lien against it. And make him put his money where his mouth is by putting up the cash to show that the pensions will remain safely in private hands. Then the lien will be released.

In the end, the electrical union sold off Bayberryland to a golf course developer named Michael Pascucci. As the house was by this time in a decrepit condition (and also sat on the middle of a proposed fairway of the prospective golf course), permission was given to tear it down. This happened just last year.

Some say that, in the end, the Rennert Mansion, like the legendary Ozymandius, will be swallowed up by the Atlantic Ocean as we emit more gas into the atmosphere, suffer more global warming, more arctic ice melting and higher tides. The Rennert Mansion sits in a low-lying area up against the sea, after all.

Then nobody would be living there except the fishes.

Toxic

site, it has not entered anyone's home or water, or reached the Sag Harbor Cove. By the way, coal tar is visible and smells awful; residents would know if it had reached their homes.

KeySpan, which must clean up the site as part of a Consent Order with the DEC, submitted a number of proposals, including containing the coal tar, excavating the site, imposing land-use controls, and a combination. The DEC selected a plan (described below) and has proposed it to the community, through public meetings and discussions with local representatives. The public has until February 17 to comment on the proposal — although at the request of the Mayor, that date likely will be extended.

Once the comments period ends, the DEC must write responses to the comments and then issue a decision setting forth whether the proposal (perhaps revised in light of comments) will be implemented. Thereafter, an extensive design process begins, in which the tiniest details of the process are established. The community will have ample opportunity to participate in the design process.

The process specifies that no work will be conducted between May 15 and September 15 in any year. Because the design process could take a year, work will not begin until September 2007. There would be an interruption for the summer of 2008, and then work would resume and hopefully be completed before the summer of 2009. The one exception is that KeySpan soon plans to remove the Hortonsphere, which was not used as part of the MGP process and is not contaminated. It will be removed in sections over a several-week period.

The proposal has several phases. First, thick steel sheets will be vibrated 40 feet into the ground all around the contamination. The contamination area includes the KeySpan site, an area south of the site not including Fisher's Annex, an area east of the site not including the Post Office, an area west of site including a part of Bridge Street, and an area north of the site including the commercial building sitting directly in front of the Hortonsphere. That building will have to be acquired by KeySpan and demolished.

The steel sheets should take about two or

Mural of Shinnecock History Found in Wall of Govt. Building

By Julia Nasser

In late October of 2005, Anna Crankshaw DePalma and her husband Anthony were rushing to a meeting in Suffolk County's purchasing office, the former Yaphank Infirmary, when they took a very fortunate wrong turn and stumbled upon a remarkable piece of our local history. It was painted on the wall, 10 by 10 feet, in vibrant color and stopped the hurried pair in their tracks, wide eyed and jaws agape.

In the mural, they saw a narrow clearing in the woods where pilgrims and Shinnecocks sit side by side. In the center stands a preacher, perched on a rock, arms outstretched, palms to the sky and Bible in hand.

The pair of history buffs (president and active member of the Hampton Bays Historical and Preservation Society) immediately recognized the stoic figure as the great Reverend Paul Cuffee, one of the most renowned members of the Shinnecock Nation, known for the vigorous sermons that he delivered to all denominations across Long Island and his unyielding fervor for spreading Christianity.

When I called the De Palma's home to inquire, I was greeted by unbridled excitement at the mention of the mural, and effervescent voices as the couple passed the phone back and forth eagerly between them as they recount the moment of discovery. Ms. DePalma likens the style to Andrew Wyeth and speculates this scene might be the original site of Canoe Place Chapel, which was built in 1791 and hosted many acclaimed sermons by Cuffee.

"It's not that no one knew about it.....but we had no idea that it existed before." Anthony explains. "There it was! We saw this piece of ing as farm laborers, on whaling boats, and, in some cases, as indentured servants alongside black slaves. His youth was spent as an indentured servant on a farm near Wading River. He was ordained when he was in his mid-30s and followed the same route as his grandfather, Peter Cuffee, who converted to Christianity during the Great Revival of the early 1740s. Paul spent the rest of his life devoted to spreading Christianity and is remembered for his impassioned sermons magnetic charm, good looks and his pious enthusiasm. Legend has it that he once walked all the way from Southampton to New Jersey to preach. He preached in Wading River, Islip, Poospatuck, Canoe Place, Bridgehampton and, toward the end of his career, at Montauk, where he finally passed away at the age of 55 of tuberculosis.

When he died, a missionary society erected a stone that now — even though it is broken down— marks his solitary grave. At his funeral, a minister read the fourth verse of the Second Letter of Paul to Timothy from the Bible.

"I have fought the good fight, I have finished the race, I have kept the faith." To bring a measure of distinction to the site, Cuffee's history that was so relevant.....and this beautiful mural. That's the incredible part of the story. What gorgeous irony that it was us that came across it." No one at the Historical Society had known about the mural.

Through their anecdotes and some research, I have compiled the events of Paul Cuffee's life. He was born in 1757 at a time when Shinnecocks were widely dispersed and work-descendants erected a small white fence around it. The fence around the site is crumbling and the stone weathered but the words are just legible. "Paul Cuffee, Indian Preacher of the Shinnecock tribe, humble pious and indefatigable, testifying the Gospel of God, Died 3/7/1812 aged 55."

These words appear on his grave, a slab of stone in what was originally the Indian settlement at Canoe Place and what is now a narrow patch of woods between Montauk Highway and the railroad tracks. This landmark, a modest memorial for one of the most revered member of the Shinnecock Nation, is coincidentally under the stewardship of Anne and Anthony. The same words are written on the mural.

Besides Paul Cuffee's legacy, another layer of history resurfaces with the rediscovery of the mural. When it was being painted, the Great Depression had ravaged the country and the world was on the brink of WWII. It was painted under the auspices of the WPA, a federally run program that created jobs through public projects and employed countless numbers of blue-collar workers across the country, building 650,000 miles of roads, 78,000 bridges, 125,000 buildings, and seven hundred miles of airport runways, between 1935-1943. It also organized small-scale art projects, performed concerts and even ran a circus. This particular mural was painted in 1939 by Robert Gaston Herbert, a well known local artist who created the largest number of New Deal murals on Long Island. He was praised for his historical precision, as an artist "who did his research," as Anne DePalma pointed out.

While somehow it had gone unnoticed to many for all these years and no one among the local historians knew about the mural, Cuffee's legacy is ingrained in local folklore. He founded the June meeting — a holiday of thanksgiving following the first harvest of strawberries. The holiday is observed on the first and second Sunday in June by the Shinnecock and Poospatuck Nations. This year's celebration is expected to include a march from Rev. Cuffee's gravesite to the Canoe Place Chapel.

As it turns out, at least some of Rev. Cuffee's many descendents — there are hundreds living today that can trace their lineage to him — were familiar with the mural and have known about it for some time. One of Rev. Cuffee's descendents, Quantuh Rose Cuffee Eleazer of Middle Island, visits his gravesite today. After twenty years in California, she has returned to Long Island to investigate the remarkable history of her family. She feels "beyond proud to carry the spirit of Paul Cuffee." She describes "his vision that we would all be united under one banner," a vision realized in the mural as Cuffee speaks to Shinnecoeks and colonists alike.

When Cuffee delivered this speech, the Napoleonic Wars were taking place, our country was in a two-year war with the British and spirituality was in flux. When the mural was painted in 1939, the Great Depression was on its way out as World War II was erupting. Now years later, two historians stumble upon it by accident. The mural, which is embedded in the wall of the infirmary, will remain at the county office indefinitely.

Shintoism come to mind), but Islam is another matter. Maybe it's just One World except for Islam.

In any case, the high priests of Islam, who wield life and death power, do not wish to make changes easily. Like orthodox adherents to other religions, they believe they have heard the word of God, and others who have heard it differently haven't. Needless to say, one man one vote doesn't do it for them.

I visited Turkey not long ago, and came away believing that what I saw was what the Arab world will look like if the West wins this confrontation. All through Istanbul, and all the other cities and towns, the loud speakers atop the mosques call the faithful to their prayers five times a day. But traffic does not stop.

Commerce continues. And though many people still walk to these nearby houses of worship to take off their shoes, roll out their prayer mats and bow down to toward Mecca, most take a pass. The neon blinks, the music plays, the planes take off and land.

Ninety-five percent of the people in this land are Muslim. And they continue to be Muslim. It is part of their lives. But it is no longer all of their lives. And the Turkish government, which is allied with the West, has an enormous army. When religious extremist parties would gain a measure of power in an election and begin to change things to conform more with Islamic law, the generals would step in and throw them out in a bloodless coup. It hasn't happened in quite a while. And so now, upon rare occasion, the mullahs have persuaded some believers to blow themselves up in the marketplace. These martyrs go to heaven. The rest go to hell.

Needless to say, Israel is the biggest offense. This westernized, secular, yet religious state is on "sacred" Arab soil. That it is also "sacred" Jewish soil and Christian soil is not their problem. Those others have it wrong.

* * *

As for me, I think it was wrong to publish a cartoon like this that would offend Muslims. I offer apologies on behalf of my journalistic breatheren. A demonstration is a good way to make a point. But murder is murder. No way around it.

So here is a joke making the rounds.

The Emperor says he will name a new Royal Samurai. He asks that the best come to his court and he will select from them. There comes a Japanese Samurai, a Chinese Samurai and a Jewish Samurai.

"Show me what you can do," the Emperor says to the Japanese Samurai. The Japanese Samurai opens a little box, and out flies a moth. SWISH. His sword flashes and the moth falls to the ground, cut in two.

"Very impressive," the Emperor says. "Next."

The Chinese Samurai opens a little box and out flies a mosquito. SWISH. SWISH. SWISH. SWISH. His sword flashes and the mosquito falls to the ground, cut into four equal quarters.

"Very impressive," the Emperor says. "And you sir?"

The Jewish Samurai opens a little box and out flies a gnat. SWISH. His sword flashes. But the gnat keeps flying.

"You seem to have failed," the Emperor says politely.

"Not at all, your Highness," the Jewish Samurai says. "Circumcision is not meant to kill."

Who Was Here

BETTY IN HER OWN WORDS

The following is reprinted from Dan's Papers, July 27, 1994.

By Dan Rattiner

I am sitting with Betty Friedan on the deck of the little house in Sag Harbor that she's lived in for 20 years. Today, workmen are running around making her little house just a little bit bigger. As we talk, there is hammering and sawing and banging and in the middle of our talk, a four poster bed arrives that she bought on sale at a discount house in Manhattan and she leaps up to have a look.

"What is all this construction?" I ask her.

"I'm building a bedroom for myself," she says. "My children come out to visit me and the tribe is breeding and there are more of them and more of them so I had to build another bedroom and I thought, why not one for me?"

"How many children do you have?" I asked.

"Three. I have my daughter, the doctor, and her two kids, my son the engineer and his wife the rabbi," she pauses. We both burst out laughing. This is so typically Jewish. "And my daughter-in-law who is the only engineer in Iceland who now lives in Princeton. All together eight: three children, eight grandchildren, age two to fourteen. They're here a lot and I love it."

Betty Friedan was born and raised in Peoria, Illinois in the 1930s. Her father owned a retail fine jewelry business. Her mother was the woman's page editor of the local paper and when Betty and her brother were born, she gave it up to raise a family. During her high school years, Betty thought she might become an actress.

"I was a great actress," she said. "I was the mad woman in Jane Eyre, and I had a five-minute walk on part and I won an award at school for it. I wanted to be a professional actress. The only trouble was to be a successful actress you had to be blonde and look like Betty Grable, which I didn't."

Then I went to Smith and reality set in. I had never been away from Peoria. I had never seen the ocean. I had never seen a mountain. I became editor of the college paper, studied psychology, and graduated Summa Cum Laude."

Betty won a scholarship to go for a doctorate at Berkeley, but she remained in the San Francisco area only one year.

"Everybody was becoming a housewife. All the boys were coming home from the war. Here I was studying to get a doctorate. I remember we saw the Moss Hart musical Lady in the Dark. It was about a female magazine editor who falls in love with the advertising director and leaves her career to be with him."

"It was playing in San Francisco and my grad school girlfriends and I would watch it and cringe, and then I remember walking

Betty Friedan Feminist 1921-2006

FAREWELL

By Debbie Tuma

About 500 people gathered at the Riverside Memorial Funeral Chapel in Manhattan last Monday, to say goodbye to a woman author and activist who forever changed the lives of generations of women. Betty Friedan, a long-time resident of Sag Harbor, who died on February 4, virtually ignited the women's liberation movement of the 1960s with her book, The Feminine Mystique.

She was remembered by her family, friends and colleagues as a fighter for causes she believed in, as a complicated, difficult woman who always spoke her mind, and as a caring mother, loyal friend and social activist.

"My mother was a mass of contradictions," said her daughter, Emily Friedan. "She was self-absorbed in all her activism, but she also tried to be there as a mother, so she called us kids her undeserved bonus, and we lived with all these contradictions. The ultimate contradiction, though, was that Betty did not fit in this world, so she changed it. She made this world a better place for me and other generations of women."

Her son, Jonathan, spoke. "I recall many nights of eating TV dinners, and watching down the street and one of our other friends commented, 'Oh here come the career women.' So I gave it up. I came to New York and I married Carl Friedan when he came back from the war."

Carl and Betty settled in Grand View, New York on the Hudson River in Rockland County. Carl was in show business. He'd been the general manager for the soldiers show during the war and Betty got a job writing at the Federated Press which was the news agency that served the labor movement in New York at the time. Then came the kids.

"This was my so-called housewife period," Betty said. "I remember stripping eight layers of paint off the balcony, chauffeuring all the kids around, fighting for the School Board. Besides my job, I freelanced articles for a women's magazine, but this was like secret drinking in the morning. Working for money wasn't done by the woman of Rockland County. And then after my second kid, I got fired. I went to see my boss and he said, 'it's your fault for getting pregnant.' At that point which was around 1962, I began to think that something isn't quite right here."

Her thinking was influenced by a book titled Modern Woman the Lost Sex, which discussed the kind of malaise that many modern American woman felt at that time and suggested that the cause of it was that women had too much education. At the same time she read this book, she received a questionnaire from Smith College in preparation for their 15th anniversary. Where had she gone? What had she done?

"I realized in answering this questionnaire that everything I had done was solely in terms of the needs of others and nothing was in terms of the needs of myself. I was living this life where everything had been plotted out for me. I was in this sexual ghetto, the suburbs, where nobody stirs between nine and five over three feet tall. Women's problems were that the shirts were not clean enough and the sink was not clean enough and our men's ulcers are a problem and our lack of orgasm was another problem. I thought that this book was wrong. I had valued my education. I wrote an article attempting to disprove what the book had said and I suggested in this book that the problems we had were maybe not because of education but because of the limited role for women."

Betty Friedan sent this article to McCall's.

"You know the women's magazines back then were edited by men. The editor read what I wrote and was shocked it had been accepted for publication and he stopped it. So then I sent it to the Ladies Home Journal where editors re-wrote my article so that the meaning of it was exactly the opposite of what I intended and I stopped it. Finally, I sent it to Red Book. They wouldn't run it either. I was told later that an editor said that I was off my rocker and only erotic women would believe what I had

Based on the remarkable reaction her article had caused, Betty Friedan decided to write a book about the "problem that has no name," as she called it.

"I was a good writer and a good thinker and I had the skills of a psychologist. I did my research and I uncovered the reasons why women had in this postwar period come to this situation so limiting to their freedom. I sent it off to WW Norton and they accepted it and published it in an edition of five thousand copies. It was called The Feminine Mystique."

The book came out, was distributed around the country and was picked clean off the shelves in a matter of weeks.

"I could never have predicted how electrifying this book would be. People have asked me why I started the Woman's Movement. I didn't start it. I wrote this book and people would call me in the middle of the night and say, 'I'm calling you from Pittsburgh and I've been to my local bookstore and they're out of it. Where can I get it?' There are people who tell me now they remember where they were when they read this book. It changed their lives and it got them to take themselves seriously for the first time."

Betty Friedan's own life changed because of the publication of this book. She felt she had to take responsibility for what she had done and follow it through. She would go off for a week at a time to lecture about her book and what it meant.

"My husband was supportive of what I was doing, but he also felt threatened by it. I would work my lecture schedule around the family. I would go for a week, come home for a week. Carl took it out on me in various subtle ways and I began to be frightened of going into a divorce situation. I was afraid of being alone. Nobody I knew was divorced. Ultimately, as this book took hold of all our lives, divorce became inevitable. It came in 1969. Let me tell you, it was harder to get a divorce than it was to start the Woman's Movement."

The publisher printed tens of thousands, then hundreds of thousands and then millions of copies of The Feminine Mystique. Ultimately, it would be published in more than 50 languages around the world.

"I remember that I was sort of hooted out of Grand View by the other housewives there. Because I had lost my job, my husband had to leave the theatre and go into advertising. My kids were at school and I had to take my turn at the carpool and sometimes I just couldn't be there and so I'd pay to have a cab take the kids to school, and this did not go over well."

Then Betty Friedan got caught up in the Civil Rights Movement. Congress proposed the passage of Title 7 that would make discrimination illegal. Betty and some of her friends were able to get the term "sex discrimination" added on in addition to "race and creed."

"It was treated as something of a joke. People in Congress laughed about it," Betty said. "I remember FDR Jr. going 'Ha ha, I guess we'll have to let men be boy bunnies now,' and where we were trying to be taken seriously often there would be doors slammed and some women said to me if you ever start an NAACP for women count me in."

The watershed moment for all of this came in June of 1966. President Johnson had invited her to the "The Status of Women" conference in Washington. Delegations from all fifty states came to the White House to thank them for their work. They would be thanked and then the group disbanded.

"I remember some of the older women in these delegations, women who had chained themselves to the White House fences in the '20s to get the vote and they said to me 'you're free and we're not. You have to hold a press conference', and I thought we should have a press conference and we should pass a resolution demanding that this sex discrimination law in Title 7 be properly enforced."

The night before the meeting with the president, a group of women met in Betty Friedan's Washington Hilton hotel room and they discussed whether the organization should pass this resolution demanding the enforcement of Title 7, and they decided not to do so and they went home for the night.

"At six in the morning my phone began to ring. One woman told me, 'You're rabble rousing. You'll get us all in trouble.' Another woman said that we'd been told we don't have the power to pass the resolution. And that's what got me. I asked that we all meet at lunch. And there under the noses of the cabinet members, just before we were to meet the President we formed the National Organization for Women. I wrote the title on a napkin and under it our first statement of purpose. 'To take action. To bring women into full participation in the mainstream of American society truly equal in partnership with men.' We collected ten dollars from everybody and agreed that we'd hold an organizing convention in the fall."

Betty Friedan credits black activist Pauli Murray as being instrumental in these early meetings. Later in the summer back in New York she phoned Curl Degler, Alice Rossi and Dean Lewis, who was the head of the social action group of the Presbyterian Church, and got them all involved in the organizing procedure. She became President of NOW.

It was after her divorce in 1969 that she began coming out to the Hamptons. She came out to what as part of a group of 10 very active people busy with their own lives. For lack of a better word, they called themselves, "The Commune." They included Betty Rollins, Arthur Hertzog, the late Martha Stuart, William J. Goode, Cynthia Epstein, Robert Hershfield, Carl Fossum and Martina Leonard. They rented the Vreeland house in Sagaponack for a number of years, the Wainright house on Sheldrake Cove and Ted Kheel's Drew Lane house.

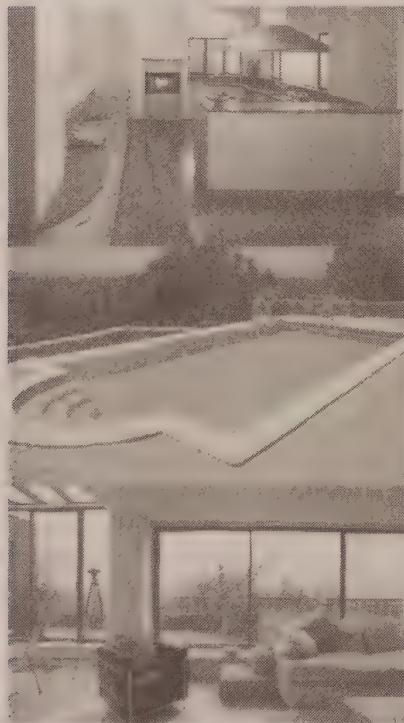

"We could have bought the Drew Lane house for about $140,000 at one point but there were too many of us. I'm not sure it would have been a good idea anyway. The group house lasted eight years, finally splitting up into two groups as a result of disagreements involving, among other things, expenses." During this time Betty Friedan stepped down as President of NOW having achieved a number of goals including class action lawsuits, proper enforcement of Title 7, and rights for pregnant woman.

In 1978 she bought her house in Sag Harbor. In late 1970 the book, It Changed My Life, a collection of her essays and articles, was published and in 1981, her book, The Second Stage, appeared.

"What I saw in the Women's Movement was a throwing out of the baby with the bath water," she said. "I never said, 'down with motherhood, marriage and men.' I just said woman can't be defined in those terms alone. It's liberating to have a choice and it's just as valuable to choose to have children as not. I felt we had to restructure work and home for real equality. It is not the feminine versus the family. Families are the new frontier. This

TWENTYSOMETHING... By DAVID LION RATTINER

For about a month and a half now, I have been heading out to Stony Brook University, two days a week, to coach the Women's Varsity Crew team. Coaching is a pretty cool gig. The main reason is because you get to be in charge of something and everyone looks up to you. The crew team at Stony Brook is a club team, which I think is one of the reasons that they let me coach there. Also it is the fact that there are not too many people that live on the East End that have ever rowed crew before. Luckily for me, I did it in college.

I can remember vividly going to practice in college, getting on a rowing machine and hating every minute of it. I'd be completely exhausted and pray for the workout to be over. But now that I am the coach of a team, I don't really have to do any of the workouts if I don't feel like it. Which is really a big bonus about coaching.

I have made the decision, however, to do the workouts during the practices. I have done this for two reasons. The first reason is the fact that I want to keep myself in shape, and what better way to do that than to train with a college varsity team? The second reason that I do it is that I want to make sure that I am not creating any workouts for my athletes that are going to make them hate me.

The other day I found myself in a little pickle. I told everyone on the team that we were going to get on the rowing machines for twenty minutes straight and then we were going to run for three miles. When I told the team that this was going to be the workout for the day, all of them groaned, and with good reason. This was not going to be an easy thing to do.

Stony Brook Rowers Heather and Elena

After a little stretching and setting up the rowing machines, we began the workout. I found myself, after just ten minutes of rowing, thinking about not completing the workout. I was getting pretty tired. I started to think to myself what my rowers would think if I stopped. After all, I'm the coach, I shouldn't even be doing this in the first place. But I decided not to stop and to just push through. I began thinking about what a jerk I was for making myself do this workout and the irony that the only person I had to blame for all of this pain was me.

It then occurred to me that my rowers were probably thinking the same thing. They were going to talk about this for the rest of the day with all of their friends about how tough their coach is. I couldn't figure out if this was a good thing or a bad thing. On the one hand, being a tough coach is what wins races. On the other hand, I want all of my rowers to like me. This was one heck of a dilemma. I decided that I was going to pretend that I forgot about the three miles that we were supposed to run after the rowing machine workout and hope that no one would notice. They would get the message. At the end of the workout I announced that it was a great practice and that everyone could go home. All of my girls got the message, except for one named Heather.

"Wait a second, Coach, weren't we supposed to run for three miles after this?"

I couldn't believe that she asked this. Yes, of course we are supposed to run three miles after this, but I was pretending that I forgot. Immediately, I was brought back to my grade school days at Springs School. My teacher, Mrs. McSweeney, would assign homework at the end of the day. But one day, she didn't. Of course, no one in the class said anything, except for one student, Sara Holmes, who I guess was looking for brownie points. She raised her hand, "What about our homework?"

It occurred to me that maybe Mrs. McSweeney went through the same thing that I was going through. Maybe she was deliberately not assigning the homework because she didn't feel like grading it the next day. I recalled her reaction of surprise when she heard Sara's question. But she ultimately acted like she had forgotten to give homework and then assigned us all some questions in math and science.

As I looked at Heather with a face of complete confusion, I nodded my head and acted like I had forgotten. "Right, we have to run three miles. Okay, everyone you heard it, let's get it going," I said.

If Mrs. McSweeney just said that there was no homework fifteen years ago, I wouldn't need all of this Advil.

my mother scrawling on legal pads on the dining room table, asking us to quiet down," he said. "But she liked to take us places, and she was fun."

As a housewife, in 1963, Friedan wrote her first bestseller, The Feminine Mystique. Her other books included Life So Far and The Fountain of Age.

Raphael Friedan, 23, recalled the many summers he spent at his grandmother's house in Sag Harbor, and about her insurmountable energy.

"Betty never liked to stay home, so she took me to dinner, and even though she was only five feet tall and walked with a cane, she was a formidable presence. My grandmother didn't take any crap from anyone — it didn't matter who they were — store clerks or waiters — she just had this fire burning inside her, and it didn't take much gasoline to explode it. Wherever Betty is now, she's giving 'em hell."

Muriel Fox called Betty Friedan "The most influential woman of the 20th century." "Betty gave women a sense of hope," said former Congresswoman Liz Holtzman.

Marlene Sanders, an ABC correspondent who had covered the women's movement activities during the 1960s in Washington, D.C., said she was living the life of the stymied housewives Friedan wrote about in The Feminine Mystique, when she met Friedan and began a 40-year friendship. "There were hardly any women in broadcasting in the 1960s," said Sanders. "But that all changed."

Also attending Friedan's funeral were many of her friends from the Hamptons, including Liz Abzug, daughter of Friedan's long-time friend Bella Abzug, Dallas Ernst, Lynne Scherr, Joe Petrocik, Marilyn Fitterman and Myron Clement.

Betty Friedan was married in 1947 to Carl Friedan, and they later divorced in 1969. She is survived by her three children, Daniel Friedan of Princeton, New Jersey, Emily Friedan of Buffalo, and Jonathan Friedan of Philadelphia, her nine grandchildren, a brother, Harry Goldstein, of Palm Springs, Ca., and Purchase, N.Y., and a sister, Amy Adams, of New York City.

Betty Friedan was buried last Monday in Hevre Kodetia cemetery in Sag Harbor.

which would expire in June 2006. This straw vote favored not renewing the contract unless the rabbi was able to explain these irregularities.

During this past year, the congregation tried mightily to defend their rabbi. As noted, in December, they even voted to fire the board, though with the legal wrangling, the legality of their doing so would remain in limbo until a judge would decide, which he just has.

This whole fight, in retrospect, seems to have all been so unnecessary. The money amounts in question are quite small. (In the course of things, it was reliably reported that the rabbi is paid more than $300,000 a year.) The case was pressed instead on the matter of ethics. Under the circumstances, one would think the rabbi would do anything he could to clear his name. However, repeated questions to supporters of the rabbi have brought forth no new information. Some congregants just say the board is out to "get" the rabbi. And maybe they are. But 19 out of 21 of them?

One hopes that the troubles at the Jewish Center of the Hamptons are finally at an end. • implies a new role for men."

Betty said that she was appalled that some feminists who were her friends attacked her for her views.

"I'd been telling them for years, 'Stop wallowing in the victim's state. There are other issues.' I think the issue is, will women have jobs or not. Men are taking many service jobs that woman currently hold because of downsizing. We need a new vision of community. We need a shorter work week and flexible hours as an alternative to downsizing."

In 1994, Betty Friedan published another remarkable book titled The Fountain of Age.

"This issue of growing older had been on my mind for 30 years. I remember in the early days of the Women's Movement I would ask some older woman about menopause. What we knew about menopause back then was that it gave you hot flashes, you became depressed and some women even had to be hospitalized. I asked some of these older women about it and they said they'd never had menopause and I thought these must be biological freaks, but then I asked them to elaborate and it turned out they DID go through menopause but it had been no big deal.

"I was very busy at this time, but I thought there's something going on here and I filed it. Then, some time ago I had lunch with Dr. Robert Butler who was the chairman of the National Institute of Aging and he said that the policy about aging was all being made by men but that the people that mostly got older were woman because men die younger. I asked him what he thought might make men live longer and he said that the research didn't deal with any of that."

"I don't like the idea that men die younger," I said. "I don't understand why nobody makes a big deal out of that."

"Wait till you see what I wrote coming out in Playboy this fall," Betty told me.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #385 How could you leave us?

What a sad week... losing both Coretta Scott King and Betty Friedan, two of my personal heroes. I always loved Coretta for being a class act. She was definitely the strong, silent type, with opinions that would surprise you. In my opinion, there's no better role model for any woman who seeks truth than Coretta Scott King.

I heard Betty Friedan speak many times over the years. She is personally responsible for much of the aggravation I have caused my loved ones in the course of my life.

I was seventeen and about to become only the second person in my whole family who would graduate from high school. I wanted to go on to college. When I announced this to my family, they looked at me quizzically and my grandfather asked, "But don't you want to get married?" I recall being dumbfounded at the realization that these two ideas were incompatible in their minds.

The Army recruiter had been to our school, and say what you will, it really is a great place for young people to get started. My stepfather blocked my scholarship to Oswego (but that's another story). So one day, I found myself deep in a very bad section of Queens at a wig factory. They cut 38 inches of hair off my head and paid me $300. I bought two suitcases, clothes, new shoes, and then I enlisted to get the GI bill so I could get my education.

Fast forward one year. I'm serving at Fitzsimons Army Medical Center Psych Unit in Denver. Sergeants and officers make inappropriate comments and advances all the time. Cornering me in the linen room was a regular pastime for the married 40-something Major who ran the psych unit. Finally he said he was putting me on night shift and keeping me there (ignoring the six month rotation) until I was "nice" to him.

Fast forward eighteen months on night shift. I can't get any quality sleep in the noisy barracks during the day. I'm punchy all the time. I worry about making mistakes constantly. Somebody leaves a copy of The Feminine Mystique in the lounge. I know it was God.

When I picked up the book, I'd never heard of sexual harassment and just accepted that this was how it was for women. By page 87, Betty said we shouldn't tolerate sexually manipulative behavior, and the Major is looking very bad. By page 192, Betty said we have to speak up, so I went to the JAG (Judge Advocate General) to complain. They said I couldn't prove what I claimed, so go away. By page 258, Betty said, we are not responsible for how men react to us, so I went to the Chaplain. He was nice, but told me it must be the way I dress (I'm in fatigues! We're all in fatigues!) that's provoking the Major. By page 317, Betty said, women must reach out to help and support each other, so I take a Chinese cooking course on post. Coincidentally, I noticed a Mrs. Weir on the sign-up sheet. She turns out to be a great gal who, coincidentally, is married to General Weir who, coincidentally, is the General of the post. Gee... it was almost like I planned it....

Fast forward two months. I'm off nights. I have a new assignment as an aide in General Weir's office. He makes me an editor of the post paper because he thinks I write "pithy humor" and he loves it! He insists I should become a writer, but I can't imagine aspiring to anything so lofty. I do think of that pesky Major sometimes ...and wonder how's he's doing since he got reassigned to Guam...

Ever since reading The Feminine Mystique, I've been an irritant to any female friend or relative whom I think is tolerating mistreatment based on gender. I've caused marital arguments. I've gently enlightened male bosses. I've called women on seductive behaviors to manipulate bosses.

The feminist movement seems to be dormant these days. All the opportunities we marched for are here, yet young women today tolerate being called "hos" and "bitches." Despite a plethora of birth control, abortions and illegitimate births are on the rise. Psychologists document a steady increase in "battered girlfriend" syndrome where young women are being controlled by guys they are just dating... They all need to read The Feminine Mystique, because Betty said one generation must teach the next.

Fond farewell, Betty and Coretta, I'll see you on the other side.

three weeks to install. The work must be done quickly, because the vibrations caused by their insertion could cause the coal tar to move. Once this perimeter containment structure is installed, additional steel sheets will be installed to create several self-contained sections within the perimeter. Then, de-water wells will be installed, to draw out ground water.

Next, each section, one by one, will be excavated, to about ten feet in depth. Because coal tar has a pungent odor, a tent will be erected over whatever section is being excavated. The tent will be negatively pressurized so that the smelly air does not flow out, other than through a filtration system. The tent will be large enough to accommodate trucks, which will cart out the contaminated soil (covered in air-proof foam and plastic) to a special disposal site out of State.

Because the soil is naturally wet with groundwater and the excavation takes place below the water table, it will be necessary to remove water as part of the work. Some of the water is already there in the soil and some will come in from the Cove as the excavation progresses. As water is removed, it will be treated in at least two well-established ways to remove any contaminants. Once the water reaches the level of purity required by clean water laws, it will be pumped back into Sag Harbor Cove, probably near the Bridge.

After all sections are excavated and filled with good soil, the steel sheets will remain as a safety measure, and there will be certain land-use restrictions on the site, largely relating to ground water use and deep excavation.

While a small number of people at Monday's meeting questioned whether the proposal goes too far or not far enough, the major concerns related to the water's effect on the Cove, and the many trucks coming in and out of Sag Harbor.

As for the trucks, the Mayor, an architect and several citizens worried about the effect of vibrations of so many trucks on historic village structures, as well as traffic and idling. The DEC representatives assured the questioners that the extensive design process will take into account these types of concerns when truck traffic routes and parking and idling rules are established. Even so, a sense of unease remained.

Water dominated the discussion, with questions from the Mayor, a Town Trustee, the Harbor Master and many property owners, including those who live on small inlets. Interestingly, there did not seem to be a concern about contaminants (the science of water purification is well established), but rather about the salinity and volume of the water being pumped into the Cove.

Few in audience seemed prepared to accept the DEC's statements on salinity or volume without more definite assurances and better back-up, which the DEC promised to provide as part of the comment process.

Art, Bottled Water And The North Fork Vineyards

Vineyards And The State Begin Meetings To Change Vineyard Laws

By R.B. Stuart

Since the New York State Liquor Authority unexpectedly "swooped down on the vineyards" regarding the sale of art in November, further concern about other items sold at vineyards has called for action. Such as the sale of bottled water. New York State Senator Kenneth P. LaValle was quoted saying, "They were looking for something that they felt was not congruent with licensing laws. And I found those tactics very offensive." Their actions prompted LaValle to request a meeting with the State Liquor Authority.

The meeting has opened up a dialogue between the SLA and vineyard owners and "is no longer in an adversary way," LaValle said. "It's an ongoing, healthy, productive dialogue with (newly appointed) SLA chief executive, Joshua Toas, regarding what the vineyards can sell in their tasting rooms. The world has grown and changed since the laws were written in 1933, for instance, selling bottled water shouldn't constitute a call from the SLA, but under the current law, it does. And depending on what kind of license the vineyard holds, bottled water could be considered outside of the license.

LaValle said, "We're trying to get people to have the same visions and understand the law. The vineyards have become a very important part of our economy on Long Island, and they bolster our tourism."

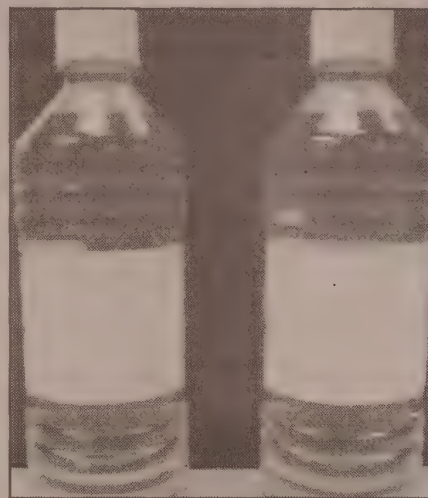

The SLAs sharp tactics came in the wake of an investigation last year by Attorney General Eliot Spitzer into pricing practices in the state liquor industry following allegations that liquor wholesalers and manufacturers have granted retailers trips to wineries, gift certificates, cash and discounts in violation of SLA rules. This resulted in the resignation of Edward Kelly, State Liquor Authority Chairman who served for more than 10 years. In November, Joshua Toas filled the new position chief executive.

Executive Director Joseph M. Gergela III of the Long Island Farm Bureau said, "It's not only about art, it's one of the number of issues to promote economic development on Long Island and throughout the state. The SLA has been very cooperative addressing the law, since the law itself is outdated and we're trying to get the statutory changes that will assist in this development," Gergela stated.

Steve Bates, the Executive Director of The Long Island Wine Council, an organization that represents the vineyards said, "The SLA inspectors have been out here visiting a lot of the vineyards, inspecting and asking questions. I'm sure this isn't occurring at any other wineries around the world, where wine and art is a natural partner, and wine is the culture. This year for the February Winter Wine Festival we partnered for the first time with the East End Arts Council."

The LI Wine Council received grant money this year from the New York Arts and Business Council and support from Suffolk County. Last year former SLA Chairman Edward Kelly was contacted and informed of their plans and he granted them permission. Which allowed the vineyards during the month of February to hold activities for non-wine items. They hope that they can continue to promote wine and cultural tourism throughout the year by selling these items (bottled water and art) after February.

Bates added, "Art and cultural activities are a big part of vineyards. We've had very constructive dialog with the SLA and we are very pleased with Toas. We'd like to make it work so it is acceptable to everyone," he ended.

"We try to work with the SLA not against them," said Jim Trezise, President of the NY Wine and Grape Foundation. "Unfortunately the ABC laws are not the ABCs. The S.L.A. is doing what needs to and there could be a difference of opinion. The ABC laws are complex, archaic and economically counter productive," Trezise concluded.

Bedell Cellars in Cutchogue was a vineyard that was briefly closed by SLA inspectors for the sale of bottled water. The owner, Michael Lynne, who is also the CEO of New Line Cinemas stated, "Obviously whatever the law is we're committed to complying with the law. If legislative and ABC laws were changed to accommodate us offering other things in the tasting room like food or non-alcoholic beverages, complimentary or otherwise, it is not a terrible thing as I see it."

The violations are usually complaint driven and if the wineries are found in violation of the ABC law, the disciplinary actions the SLA takes come in the form of a letter of advice or warning to a civil penalty/money fine. Mark Anderson, Deputy Commissioner of the NY State Liquor Authority said, "Our agency wants to be helpful to the wineries, we're trying to take the approach of facilitator so we're working with the wineries to get them in compliance, so there isn't any violations. We're very confident this matter will be resolved soon," he concluded.

The Love Experts Tell All

Panel Of Experts In Cutchogue Tell Singles And Couples The Secrets Of Love

By Debbie Tuma

In keeping with the upcoming Valentine's Day celebration, a panel discussion on love and relationships was held last Friday night at Borghese Vineyard in Cutchogue.

This evening was one in a popular series of panel discussions being held around the East End called, "Out of the Question." It was started last year by writer and business consultant Warren Strugatch, of Quogue. Strugatch, who chooses thought-provoking topics and guests to interview on his panel, said he thought this concept might catch on out here, and he is glad it has.

Last Friday night, about 50 people came to taste the Borghese wine, enjoy a buffet by Black Tie catering of Southampton, and listen to three authors and experts on relationships and dating. Guests were even treated to complimentary back rubs by "Massage on the Go," a group of traveling masseurs from Holbrook.

Ann Marie Borghese, who hosted this event with her husband Marco said, "We welcome everyone to our vineyard. When I lived in Philadelphia, I attended panel dinners at people's homes and we all had great conversation. It gave me the idea to partner with Warren Strugatch in this kind of an evening at our vineyard. We are also introducing our new wine, "Borghese Reserve." This vineyard, formerly called, Hargrave Vineyard, was the first one to appear on the North Fork.

The panel included Robin Gorman Newman, author of the books, "How To Meet A Mensch in New York," and "How To Marry A Mensch," who teaches at the New School for Social Research in Manhattan, and who calls herself "Long Island's Love Coach." It also included Gabe Fischbar, the author of "The Guide To Picking Up Girls," and Dennie Hughes, author of the book "DateWorthy—Getting the Relationship You Want," and a columnist in US Weekly, who writes, "Relationtips."

The authors discussed their books, which were for sale at this event. Gabe Fischbar said he first got inspired to write a book about relationships by giving advice to friends, and by seeing the movie, "Swingers."

"Most dating books are geared toward women, so I thought I'd write one to help men," he said. Some of his advice for men is to have what he calls a "wingman" to go out with—a male friend who can say nice things about you to the girls you meet, and to build your credibility, since people judge you also by your friends. He said there are also certain nights that are better to go out on to meet women, like festive Halloween, New Year's Eve, and even Christmas Eve, and other nights that aren't so good, like Valentine's Day, where everyone's coupled off.

Dennie Hughes, who said she "dated a lot" and worked for teen magazines, where she received hundreds of letters, said she wanted to help women "to recognize someone who's worth what they've become." She recommended that women "never have sex on the first date," that they improve their photos on their Internet ads, and that they "be open and proactive in their social life, rather than waiting around for men to meet them."

"You should always be positive, say hello, and get out of the house," she advised. "Do volunteer work, meet people through friends, the Internet or the grocery store."

Robin Gorman Newman said she describes how to meet nice, responsible men (Menschies) in New York or anywhere. She also said to be open and friendly, and she also coaches people privately, who are looking to meet someone.

Other advice that was given is to show interest on a date, and don't always be trying to impress someone. Strugatch questioned the authors about their views, and then took questions from the audience. Several people joked about how it's hard to meet people on the North Fork in the winter. Thus the result of a packed house that night, in the middle of winter.

Strugatch will be holding more events like these in coming months. Meanwhile, the Borghese Vineyard is hosting a big Bridal Show Event on February 26, with all sorts of ideas to plan the perfect wedding.

So first get out there and find your perfect partner for Valentine's Day!

Dan's North Fork

North Fork Artist of The Week

Singer, Monday Michiru

By R.B. Stuart

At age 13, Monday Michiru was in Los Angeles recording her professional debut on her mother's big band album. "The piece was called Mina Mata and at the end of the intro my mother gave me a box of chocolates," Michiru remembered.

Monday was born 42 years ago in Tokyo, Japan. Her father was jazz saxophonist, and her mother was a Grammy nominated Japanese jazz pianist (the first Japanese person to cross over to American jazz). She wanted her first daughter to have a name that would reflect her father's American heritage. Thus Monday was chosen. With such musical talent in her genes it was only befitting that she find a passion for music.

Michiru was raised in Japan, New York and Los Angeles. Beginning at age 11 she studied classical flute for eight years and won first place in several local flute competitions in LA. She attended the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Michigan and was awarded a scholarship from both the Armstrong Flute Association and Interlochen Arts Academy. During that time she joined the chorus groups as a means to develop an ear for tone.

"My aim was to get into Julliard or Curtis, but I needed a full scholarship," Michiru said. "Eventually I found the classical flute to be too rigid and competitive," she admitted.

When she was 19 she was in a car accident, which would change her life's course. "The accident wrecked my mouth and I couldn't practice the flute. I realized I no longer had my heart in it and it was probably not meant to be. It was a very difficult choice," she explained.

It took Michiru about a year to figure out that she wanted to pursue singing. "I was living in LA at the time and was working as a secretary while studying weekly with a voice teacher. Then at 23 one of my demos ended up in the hands of a talent scout in Japan. They were casting an amateur actress who could also sing," she said.

Michiru landed the lead role as an opera singer in the film Hikaru Onna (Luminous Woman). So in five days she told her boyfriend goodbye, quit her job, packed her bags and left for Japan.

The film would go on to win critical acclaim and Michiru remained in Tokyo for 13 years where she continued to act, host her own radio shows, made television appearances, began modeling and tried her hand at journalism.

By 1993, she was releasing albums in Japan, Europe, Australia, and South America and became known for being one of the pioneers of the acid jazz movement in Japan. Besides her solo work she became a featured singer/songwriter, collaborating and producing with various groups and artists.

Michiru moved back to New York six years ago to be with her new husband, a jazz trumpeter. After the birth of their son they relocated to Aquebogue. And what she extracted from her unusual career, "With singing it is the freedom to express, to reach beyond emotion to convey a message whether it's spiritual or emotional," she explained.

The challenging aspect to being a performer, she says is "If you are a female and a singer no one will look beyond the fact that you're a trinket on stage. And as far as age is concerned, the media has put an expiration date on female singers."

She derives her inspiration from her son, her parents, husband and friends. "My backyard even inspires me," she said with a belt of laughter. She has been influenced by Cassandra Wilson, Diane Reeves, Stevie Wonder, Flora Purim and others. "The list is endless," she stressed.

Her one regret is not insisting to her manager in Japan that she wanted to sing. She added, "They treated me very well so I can't complain."

And her hope is, "To score film soundtracks. That's my big dream."

Michiru has performed in New York City at SOB's and the Blue Note. Her U.S. debut CD, Naked Breath a guitar and vocal duet and Routes, a fusion style CD, are both available through ArtistShare, an Internet record company or can be found at www.mondaymichiru.com

OVER THE BARREL...

Bring On the Steel — The Chardonnay Shift is On

Heavy, over-manipulated Chardonnay is one of the wine community's least appealing members, at least in the eyes, and palate, of this wine lover. Wine geeks often label these wines "flabby" but I compare drinking them to sucking on a butter-slayered two by four. And, despite what some sales-minded winemakers will tell you, pairing these wines with food is a crashout at best.

Of course, chardonnay is a key chameleon variety, with a seemingly endless array of styles. On one end you have the crisp, fruity, acidic chardonnay — those that don't spend any time in oak barrels during the fermentation process. These wines tend to be lighter yellow color and their flavors lean toward green apples and tart citrus with a crisp, clean mouthfeel. On the opposite end of the style spectrum are chardonnays that look like liquid gold. These wines have been born and raised in oak barrels and have gone through a process called malolactic fermentation — the conversion of malic acid to lactic acid — which gives the wine a fuller, more viscous feel in the mouth. The flavor profile in these wines is also richer, with more baked apple, butterscotch, buttery toast, vanilla and popcorn.

Locally, Chardonnay is the most-planted variety (even more than Merlot) and most wineries produce at least two different styles. As Alexandra Macari of Macari Vineyards puts it, this is because, "Some consumers, especially women, love the oak with the buttery style, while others enjoy the food friendly style of steel fermented Chardonnays."

While oaky, "California-style" Chardonnay remains immensely popular in the United States, there is a shift afoot towards less-manipulated wines that allow the fruit's true identity to shine through. Macari thinks ".....we all drank too many oaky (Chardonnays) in the late 80s and early 90s from California." This has led to a proliferation of steel-fermented bottlings (or ones that are made mostly of steel-fermented wine).

Long Island winemakers seem to be doing a particularly good job bringing the best out of Chardonnay fruit — without being heavy handed with oak. Barbara Shinn, co-owner of Shinn Estate Vineyards explains their decision to make only one chardonnay — a crisp, fruity one. "The Long Island terroir is not suited for wines produced in a Napa Valley, California style. (And our) customers have been very enthusiastic about our Chardonnay, even those who have sworn off of Chardonnay altogether."

Slowly but surely, card-carrying members of ABC ("Anything But Chardonnay") are trying Chardonnay again. Look for this trend to continue.

So how can you tell if that bottle of Chardonnay on the wine store shelf is heavy and buttery or crisp and fruity? It's not always easy because wineries aren't required to tell you that sort of information on the label. But, there are two hints that can help — especially with wines produced on Long Island.

If you see the word "reserve" on a bottle and it costs over $20, chances are it was aged in oak barrels and will be a bit fuller bodied and have some toasty or butterscotch character. Wines raised in oak barrels cost more because the barrels are expensive. Some bottles from other regions, like Australia or

California, will label steel-fermented wines as "naked" or simply "unoaked."

It's important to remember that relatively few local Chardonnays, even if they are barrel fermented and aged, fall into the "flabby" category. The climate that makes the East End so ideal for grapes usually results in enough acidity to bring balance. And, most winemakers seem reluctant to pummel us with oak

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

ART AND LIFE AS ONE: DAVID SLATER Part II.

Art serves many purposes, but as last week's "Art Commentary" suggests, endeavors which reflect an artist's life experiences and world view seem the most commendable. We understand, of course, that some works are more subtle in their autobiographical approach, while others are more direct.

Collages by Sag Harbor artist David Slater are both direct and subtle, a contradictory relationship extending to other aspects of his life as well. For example, Mr. Slater's demeanor exudes gentleness and warmth; anyone meeting him would agree he's a person who would offer the proverbial "shirt off his back." He was once even mistaken for a rabbi, with his beard and long hair, when he was teaching at a Jewish private school in England.

Even so, there's another side to Mr. Slater, one that had him running from the law, facing a prison term and caused him to carry weapons for protection. During that period, he was mistaken for a "hippie" or worse, a criminal, again when sporting a beard and long hair.

It's apparent that Mr. Slater was neither a rabbi nor a criminal, although he was definitely a hippie, by his own admission, during the 1960s and 70s.

It's also apparent that some of these experiences are directly referenced in Mr. Slater's collages, especially his time as a fugitive.

According to Mr. Slater, "I was in Providence, having taught at the Rhode Island School of Design, when a call went out for American Indian Movement volunteers to go to Wounded Knee to help with protests against the corrupt tribal government. (This was in 1973 when Marlon Brando refused his Academy Award to protest the same cause.)

"I offered to carry food to the front line, so to speak, but it was a dangerous mission because we were shot at and could have been killed. I was then arrested and spent three days in jail; I was considered a prisoner of war, and put in chains when we were transported. I was also questioned by the F.B.I. They did let me go, but I spent five months on the road thinking I was a fugitive. I later found out the charges had been dropped. And you can bet I carried weapons to protect myself. I was a defrocked Professor in Hippie-land."

Reminders of this time appear in Mr. Slater's collages as Indian and weapon motifs.

There are also other references in Mr. Slater's work that are indirect and subtle, covering a wide range of interests: icons from the Kabala (clowns/fools) and magic/voodoo; death images from his latest piece (a skull, scorpion, black cat).

There are references to Mr. Slater's favorite literary figures as well, like Jack Kerouac (he includes a Kerouac quote in several of his collages). Not everyone catches these allusions, of course, but when they do, Mr. Slater is delighted.

Like his life experiences, Mr. Slater's style seems surrealistic and dream-like, a kind of stream-of-consciousness where, "I open my mind up and things just pop into my world."

HONORING THE ARTIST: JORDAN WOLFSON

It's hard to imagine that this week's cover artist, Jordan Wolfson, once studied pre-med at Yale University. It's quite a jump from medicine to art although we do know some doctors who are also artists.

Even so, Mr. Wolfson decided to follow his "bliss" (as Joseph Campbell might say) and pursue a creative field instead. And let's not forget, studying the sciences has helped Mr. Wolfson. As he puts it, "I have easy access to the analytical process as a result of my studying pre-med, and I'm also intuitive."

Mr. Wolfson's interior paintings prove that this combination of abilities works. Consider the room featured on the cover. There's a strong "presence" here, one that could derive from the artist's instinctual sense of being in that room, or even of someone else who had just been there.

Conversely, Mr. Wolfson's "interplay between solid objects and space" establishes a dynamic suggesting a more concrete interpretation of what we see: perhaps this is where the artist's analytical process plays a part.

Expressed another way, Mr. Wolfson is drawn to the "everyday environment, the mundane where there are no great announcements saying, 'This is great.'" While he imbues his rooms with "naturalism," their painterly style implies a richness that goes beyond reality, a sense that there is, in fact, "greatness" below the surface.

Helping to fuel this dichotomy is the narrative aspect of Mr. Wolfson's work. There's a sense that a plot is developing: we want to know who's been in the room or who might be coming.

Regarding Mr. Wolfson's professional life, there seems to be no such dichotomy. Once he decided to become an artist, his path seemed clear. Not that Mr. Wolfson didn't experience diverse aesthetic experiences along the way: a residency in Provincetown; a ten-year sojourn in Israel where he discovered a sense of place and history and where his painting "matured."

About that period, Mr. Wolfson has strong memories: "It was in Israel that I put things together. There was also such a strong sense of presence there, a density in the air, a charge. It was like dialoguing with the air."

Asked what he might be doing five years from now, Mr. Wolfson imagined he'd still be painting his interiors (although he also likes to create landscapes and still lifes). He'd also like to visit India again and Brazil. Anyplace where he can commit the intuitive and analytical to canvas.

—Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Wolfson's work can be seen at DFN Gallery in New York. His works will also be on view at Philadelphia's Serathin Gallery beginning Feb. 17. (Tel: 215-923-7000). Mr. Wolfson's website is: www.jordanwolfson.com.

Entertainment In Town

review: rabbit hole...by gordin & christiano

Manhattan Theatre Club is presenting the world premiere of David Lindsay-Abaire's new five character play Rabbit Hole, a serious drama about a family that has suffered an enormous tragedy. The story, directed by Daniel Sullivan, concerns the struggles of a young couple to cope with the sudden accident that has killed their only child, a four-year-old son, and has altered their lives forever. Anyone who has ever lost a loved one will know the trauma and emptiness of death, especially from sudden accidents, but nothing can prepare us for the needless death of a young child.

Set in Larchmont, New York, Rabbit Hole marks Lindsay-Abaire's Broadway debut, and the sad story is quite a departure for the imaginatively quirky playwright, who has given us the amusingly offbeat Fuddy Meers, Wonder of the World, and Kimberly Akimbo. The young parents at the play's center, Becca and Howie, have been shattered by the accident that took little Danny's life and are drifting apart in their grief. They must contend not only with Becca's impulsive younger sister Izzy (unexpectedly pregnant out of wedlock), but her outspoken mother, Nat, as well as the seventeen-year-old Jason, who ran down their only child when the boy dashed into the street after his dog. Jason swerved to avoid the dog, killing little Danny instead. As the play unfolds, we learn the painful details of that eventful day eight months earlier. All of the action is colored by Danny's death and serves to isolate the characters.

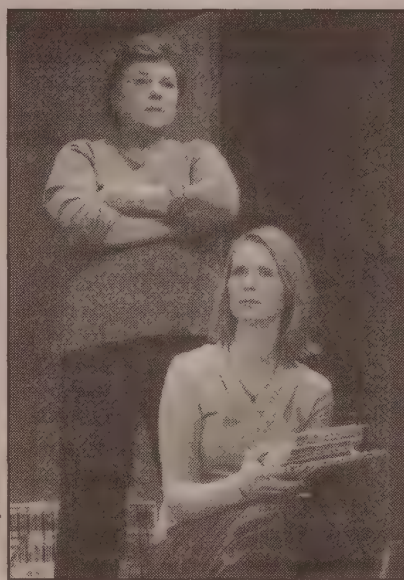

The well-written drama has an outstanding cast that is headed by Cynthia Nixon (from HBO's hit television series "Sex & The City"), making her first stage appearance in three years, and the Tony Award-winning actress Tyne Daly, best known to television audiences for her Emmy Award-winning work in "Cagney and Lacey" and "Judging Amy." Considering the grace and wit of the playwright's dialogue and all the talent involved, what could have been a profoundly moving drama unfortunately comes off as a tepid TV movie of the week.

Ms. Nixon is affecting as the young mother Becca, giving a restrained performance that serves to heighten the moments when she almost loses control. The always exceptional John Slattery plays her strong husband, Howie, who is the more emotional of the two and completely breaks down at one point before pulling himself together. The evenly matched couple make excellent foils for one another.

Ms. Daly is an endearingly strong presence as Nat, Becca's blunt mother, and she has some of the evening funniest lines, and makes the most of every single one of them. Playing Izzy, Becca's younger sister, Mary Catherine Garrison, is a rowdy chip off her mother's block.

The evening is a slice of life that hums along until the predictable conclusion, but you are never sure how they got there. As entertaining as much of it is, the proceedings simmer at a rather bland pace with few surprises. No one acts out of character or does anything unexpected, except maybe Howie. We hear of inappropriate behavior, but never witness any. I would like to see these characters get themselves into trouble and watch them recover. Everyone for the most part is too contained and everything is a little too easy. There is a smoothness here that, despite all the sincerity, just doesn't ring true.

John Lee Beatty's detailed set design is an ultra realistic suburban home replete with a living room, dining room and kitchen. His set moves and rotates with such efficient precision that it is quite astonishing, providing the perfect setting at the precise moments necessary. The meticulousness of Mr. Beatty's set mirrors the smoothness of the evening and ultimately upstages the entire production.

Rabbit Hole opened at the Biltmore Theatre, 261 West 47th Street, on February 2, 2006. Tickets are available at the box office or by calling TeleCharge.com at 212-239-6200 or at www.telecharge.com.

Dave Evans'

MINI - MOVIE REVIEWS

Curious George

The children's classic comes to the screen in simple but effective animated form. Of course nothing will stop the chorus of voices crying that this is sacrilege, but at worst this is harmless and at best, charming. Will Ferrell, Drew Barrymore and David Cross (from "Arrested Development") provide the voices.

Final Destination 3

A surprise third outing in this B-List horror series. This time, high school senior Wendy (Mary Elizabeth Winstead) foresees a terrible accident on a rollercoaster. Those who get off before the ride begins survive, but soon enough find themselves being picked off like flies by mysterious fate. Silly, of course, but cheap, easy fun.

Firewall

Harrison Ford has been off the radar for some time now and this mediocre thriller from the director of the wretched Wimbledon is no glorious return to form. Here he plays Jack Stanfield, a security executive for a large company that he is forced to rob to pay a ransom for his family. "24" has the monopoly on the loved-ones-held-hostage genre, making this wholly unnecessary.

The Pink Panther

Steve Martin takes on the Peter Sellers role in this prequel to the 1963 classic with predictably lackluster results. Here Clouseau must solve the murder of a soccer coach while tracking down the thief of the Pink Panther diamond. A supporting cast that ranges from the talented Emily Mortimer to the absurd Beyonce Knowles does little to improve matters.

Something New

Like fairly typical romantic comedy conventions, the film follows Kenya (Sanaa Lathan), a successful accountant in search of a successful relationship. Kenya is assisted by the usual gaggle of girlfriends and ultimately must make the choice between sturdy Brian (Simon Baker) and ravishing new guy Mark (Blair Underwood). Predictable fare, but utterly delightful.

When A Stranger Calls

Basing a film on an urban myth seems strange given the difference between five minutes around a campfire and ninety minutes of celluloid. Here, director Simon West plays out the problems, starting off spookily enough with an enactment of the prank-caller-calling-from-within-the-house nightmare and then trailing off into a dull police procedural.

Nanny McPhee

Colin Firth stars as a widower with seven badly behaved children who have scared off the help. Instead of Mary Poppins, the family ends up in the care of the magical Nanny McPhee (Emma Thompson, under heavy prosthetics). Throw in the adorable Thomas Sangster (of Love Actually fame) and this is delightful, old-fashioned family fun.

Big Momma's House 2

Director John Whitesell (also on his 'coming soon' roster, Cats and Dogs 2: Tinkle's Revenge) must be paying off some kind of debt as he heads up this uninspired sequel to the not terribly successful 2000 original. Martin Lawrence picks up where he left off as the FBI agent forced to go undercover as an obese middle-aged woman. It will make you yawn for the days before fat-suits.

Annapolis

Jake Huard (James Franco), a kid from the wrong side of the tracks who yearns to be accepted to the Naval Academy, finds all his dreams come true. Once there, however, he finds he must prove himself to those around him by taking part in the fierce boxing competition that is the Brigade Championships. A little bit Top Gun, a little bit Rocky, a lot of tedious nonsense about the 'honor' of violence.

Hoodwinked

Following the lead of Shrek, yet on a fraction of the budget, this charming animation, written and directed by Cory and Todd Edwards, puts a twist on the classic fairy tale of Little Red Riding Hood. With excellent vocal work from the unfairly sidelined Glenn Close and the newly (thanks to Brokeback Mountain) credible Anne Hathaway this is delightful, unglossy family fun.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

I've always passionately felt that a special Oscar should have been given to the old time movie mogul who declared, "I hate movies where people write with feathers." I'm sure they galled him because a costume movie required wardrobes you couldn't get at department stores and had to have arsenals of antique weapons that had to be made to enable the hero to regain his beloved, a fabulously bedecked heroine, by skillfully using a mace and jousting lance, sword and axe, or the frilly, epee and dirk. My peevishness regarding costume/feather movies is that their content is usually feather weight. Then, lo and get hold! Casanova shook the pin feathers off my quill. I was tickled pink. The film, starring Brokeback Mountain's Heath Ledger, is sensibly silly and says something. It certainly does not fit the dressmaker form of your typical costume epic. At the start, Casanova is a bright, sprightly farce that knocks the dust out of powdered wigs and deflates the heaving low-cut bodices of Giacomo Casanova's lady friends. His own arduous erotic penchants have also been softened and shrunken whilst his swordsmanship and set-tos with the inquisition (ergo, politics), have been prominently enlarged. Oh, the seductions are there: nuns, women of royalty, a maid or maiden or two but, he doesn't crow about his roosterfish capabilities. The world has long questioned the head count of conquests as accounted in his memoirs. We can give him a break. After all, if you've read the dear, dear Shelly Winter's autobiographies, Casanova comes across as a piker. Still his record is awesome and his grappling with the radical right wing executioners is dashed fine.

A friend of the Doge of Venice implores Cas to take a wife to appease the inquisition and its most heinous terrorist, Jeremy Irons as Bishop Pucci, a snake in a carrot top wig. Cas takes a stab at it but he's just feinting. In this screenplay, obviously sharpened to a pin-pricking of machismo by Tom Stoppard (who's uncredited) Cas is head-over-boothheels for a tough Sienna Miller, as Francesca Bruni, who fences as well as he and writes, with a male pseudonym, for a feminist magazine. Like Casanova, she laughs at marriage and for good reason. Her family needs her to marry a wealthy tub of lard, literally. He's the obese Lard Lord of Genoa. Oliver Platt is hilarious in a fat suit as the huge-bottomed Paprizio. He suits the comedic, light contemporary-like play on historical attitudes and mores, presented quite faithfully.

Venice of 1753 was turning the population against itself. Kind'a like today, the religious are trying to repress the rights of those who don't fit their restrictive ideals. The hypocritical opposed the candid thinkers. The Inquisition fought philosophers, gays and those hinting of fornication, of which Casanova reeked. Therefore, Jeremy Irons' Pucci made him his special target. That, no laughing matter since punishment could be death by torture. Pleasure, at that time, really had a price. Francesca wrote her ideas of sexual equality under a false name for good reason.

Heath Ledger is a free-spirited, great looking guy who turns women on by barely twitching one of his muscles (Don't think this is easy). One of the real surprises is the film's director, Lasse Hallstrom, who lost his mojo in his last two or three films. Too concerned with "importance," his work was a bore. With Casanova his work is sly and winking, understating sight gags and making farcical scenes that could be vulgar come off as mildly risqué. Other performances adding spirit and fanciful feather-tickling are Omid Djalili as Casanova's deadpan man servant. Charlie Cox is Giovanni, Francesca's brother. He's in love with the virgin Casanova has pretended to wed to save his neck from being stretched. Those were rough times, and the film utilizes every historical plot noose to secure a wise length of wit. It even manages to make it all up-to-date modern.

So, what would the old, Cuban cigar smoking mogul think about this new costume movie? He'd probably like it, since it was not written with a musty, flea bitten ol' feather. Scratch-scratch-scratch.

MAYOR ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

It is difficult for me to review this film adequately. It is certainly not a good movie, but it is not really bad. On occasion, because of the fine acting of Greg Kinnear and Pierce Brosnan, it is amusing.

The Post critic, Kyle Smith, gave it one star and summed it up as vulgar, gauche and loathsome, the adjectives being reserved for Brosnan's character.

Julian (Pierce Brosnan) is a professional assassin. On assignment, he meets Danny (Greg Kinnear) who is a businessman trying to close a very big deal. The movie can't be characterized as a buddy movie, although it has strong elements of such bonding, even a verbal sexual move by Julian on Danny. It also has a strong heterosexual element when Danny attempts before leaving the house one morning to have sex on the kitchen table with his wife, Bean (Hope Davis). Their coupling is interrupted by an act of God. I like all three of these actors, which is why I went to see the film. While I can't recommend it to you, when it is all said and done, I've seen much worse. And, if you are amused by James Bond playing out of character, you might even like it.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

Valentine's Day

This winter has been very odd, to say the least. At sunrise on February 2nd Punxsutawney Phil, the world's most famous groundhog, emerged at Gobbler's Knob in Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania and after casting a shadow, reported that there will be six more weeks of winter. The way things are going that might be a good thing. The weather has been fantastic, and spring and summer might just be awful if this backward seasonal trend persists. Groundhog's Day isn't the only thing February is famous for. It's Black History Month, President's Day is on the 20th and best of all, next Tuesday is Valentine's Day. I used to be a bit of a Scrooge when it came to the day of love, but as time passes and I grow up a little more, I've begun to see it less for being a "Hallmark Holiday" and more as a reason to celebrate the relationship with the one I love. I'm a newlywed, so maybe the world is a bit rosier, but I stand by this conclusion. I'll likely be staying home with my wife rather than braving crowded restaurants, but it's my duty to let you in on some great things to do in Manhattan on the day of hearts and roses and teddy bears.

New York City isn't Paris, but despite the attitudes and the grime, it can actually be quite romantic. I just got the great news that my brother got engaged. While researching this column and pondering his coming nuptials, I remembered that the Empire State Building (ESB) hosts weddings on Valentine's Day. Each year couples become an exception to the ESB's rule of "no longer hosting private weddings and parties" and head up to the 80th floor to tie the knot. Those that marry are automatically dubbed members of the ESB Wedding Club, which entitles them to free admission to the building's observatories on their anniversary (Valentine's Day). Couples must write to the building and explain why they want to marry there. The lucky are chosen on the "basis of originality, uniqueness, style, etc." The deadline for requests is November 30th. Check out ESBNYC.com for details.

If you're not looking to get married just yet, or maybe you already are married, no romantic trip to the city is complete without a carriage ride through Central Park. The horse-drawn carriages are found, year-round, lined up along Central Park South, at 59th Street between 5th and 6th Avenues. The ride is classic New York romance and has been documented in countless television shows and movies. In fact, if you are looking to get hitched, they are considered one of the most popular places in the city to pop the question. Bring along some champagne. For special occasions, you can pre-book specific carriage styles, sizes and colors. Call (212) 736-0680 or visit CentralParkCarriages.com for more info. Along with the carriage, VacationIdea.com rates Bethesda Terrace, Cherry Hill and Bow Bridge as the other top choices for marriage proposals.

My number one pick for this year's Valentine's Day in Manhattan is a photography exhibit at the 92nd Street Y. "As Long as We Both Shall Live: Married Couples in America" is New York City-based photographer Robert Fass' first major show in his hometown. The exhibit collects his black and white portraits of couples married 40 years or more. He began the project in 1997 with a portrait session with his parents – married 47 years. It eventually grew into a massive undertaking, which has taken Fass across the country and back photographing and interviewing couples with this exceptional commitment. The pictures are good, and the stories behind them, and told in them, are inspiring. Some couples take a pragmatic approach to their union, while others still beam with romantic whimsy, but all of them have survived together through good and bad. They are a testament to the institution of marriage and wise to the ways of making it work. The show has been up since January 31st, but a special Valentine's Day reception and catalogue signing with gourmet chocolate will take place from 5-6:45p.m. on the 14th. The show closes on February 23rd.

The 92nd Street Y is located at 1395 Lexington Avenue. Call (212) 415-5749 or visit LongMarriedCouples.com for more info. Explore the city and make it your oyster of love this Valentine's Day. It's more romantic than you think.

TAKE A HIKE WITH KEN KINDLER

Poxabogue Preserve

Last Sunday I woke up several hours ahead of my family, so I grabbed an apple, a handful of almonds, and some water and headed for Poxabogue Preserve. The Preserve is on the western edge of Sagaponack, on the north side of the 40-acre Poxabogue Pond. A half-mile nature trail takes you through this 26-acre park. It is a great place for winter waterfowl watching. If you are an energetic hiker, you may be tempted to follow the trail parallel to the railroad tracks, under the overpass, to Narrow Lane and then head north on Haines Path to the entrance to the Long Pond Greenbelt. The short lines of sight and the narrow underpass make this a dangerous place to walk, so I normally will return to my car and drive to the trailheads for the Long Pond Greenbelt trail system.

To get to the Poxabogue Preserve trailhead, travel on Montauk Highway, through Water Mill and Bridgehampton. A mile east of Bridgehampton Sag Harbor Turnpike turn left (north) at the traffic light onto Sagg Road. Take the first left onto Hildreth Lane and bear right onto Old Farm Road. You will see Poxabogue Pond to the left. After a short distance, you will see a dirt parking area. Suffolk County Parks installed two metal gates at the entrance to the Preserve to discourage people from driving on the wide, sandy road. This road had been created to give access to a subdivision that, thankfully, was never built.

Shortly after entering the Preserve, and just before the second gate, the trail bears to the left (south) through a field covered with moss, bearberry, wintergreen, reindeer lichen, and scattered bayberry and cedar. The last time I visited this trail it was summer and there were tree swallows nesting in the bluebird houses built by the South Fork Natural History Society. The access road was churned up by motorized traffic, and it was difficult to follow the trail because there were few trees on which to put blazes. This Sunday, I was not surprised to see the birdhouses vacant, but I was pleasantly surprised to see that the County had erected a second barricade to block cars from entering the Preserve, and that the Southampton Trails Preservation Society maintenance crew had used stakes with black owl blazes to mark the trail. Thanks to the well-placed blazes, this trail is now very easy to follow. As the trail approaches the pond, you enter an oak and hickory woods where you are afforded several excellent views of the pond. Soon you will see that there are two bodies of water, Little Poxabogue Pond and Poxabogue Pond. If you are alert, you can find an unmarked trail running between the two ponds. When I walked to the end of this trail, I followed the sound of moving water and discovered a place where the water runs between the ponds. I sat on a log here for a long time while listening to the water and the tap, tap, tapping of a woodpecker, and then I re-traced my steps back to the marked trail. Here the trail follows the woods road parallel to the railroad tracks. This part of the sandy path is a perfect place to play animal detective. I always check to see the tracks of animals that have used the path or cut across it and try to guess what they were up to. After a short walk this road takes you back to the parking lot.

This is a short trail and it is easy to follow. It runs through fields, woods, and wetlands, offering an interesting and diverse ecology, quite amazing for such a small parcel of land. Next time you wake up looking for a nice morning walk, perhaps you will consider taking one here. For more information about this Suffolk County Parks Preserve call Suffolk County Parks at 631-854-4949, and for more information about trails in Southampton, call Southampton Trails Preservation Society at 631-537-5202.

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Desperate Housewives

Desperate car sellers are in the same league as desperate housewives in the sense that they are desperate to get things done, mainly the sale of their hard-to-sell cars. On eBay, which has been called "America's garage sale website," you can literally buy anything. When it comes to cars on eBay, especially collector cars, the choice selection is truly amazing.

However, whenever I see a car on eBay, I do wonder how desperate the seller must be to try to sell his car this way, when it certainly would be easier and less fraught with grief had he only tried to sell it locally. I also wonder what level of buyer would purchase a car from photographs, having never driven the car or heard it run. Unless the car is one of a kind or traditionally hard to sell, I see no reason to even look to eBay for a collector car. There are several cars that I have looked for on eBay myself, mainly out of curiosity about the market, with the extremely remote thought of purchase, mainly because of the reasons mentioned.

I like Italian collector cars and in the past have owned several: Fiat, Lancia and Ferrari have always fascinated me, with Fiat and Lancia obviously being the most affordable. In America, there is an "underground" collector market for both Fiat and Lancia because few Americans appreciate these little Italian machines. This is where eBay shines, because, on any given day there are from twenty-five to thirty Fiats for sale. These Fiats are owned by desperate car sellers who cannot find an easy sale in their locals. Ferrari, on the other hand, is a car everyone lusts after. I'm always surprised to see them on sale on eBay at less than bargain prices. They are not put there by desperate sellers, but usually by greedy dealers looking to get the most buck for their bang. There is nothing wrong with that, it's called capitalism, but I certainly wouldn't buy an expensive piece of aluminum, like a collector Ferrari, without first inspecting the thing in person, with an Italian mechanic at my side.

There is another facet to desperate car sellers, and I hate to say it, but in many cases, they are less than honest. Let's face it, many times a car is sold because, to use computer jargon, there is a fatal error somewhere in the vehicle, like a bad engine, or transmission, or rust hidden on the body or chassis. I once almost purchased a 1965 Porsche 356SC coupe that had a beautifully running engine. When I first test-drove the car, the engine had already been warmed up by the owner. Several days later, when I came to pick up the car and started it cold, I heard a connecting rod knock. Of course this killed the deal, because fixing a con rod bearing in that engine would have cost about $1500...and that was in 1970! Just another desperate owner trying to get rid of an expensive repair.

Besides mechanical problems, rust is a big problem with collector cars. Let's be realistic, rust never sleeps, and a car that is thirty to fifty years old is certainly going to have some rust. That's another problem with eBay. A lot of collector car ads on the internet have pictures of beautifully painted body panels, but very few show you the chassis. Even if the chassis is shown, it is very easy to hide rust, especially in a photograph. The best advice I can offer here is to know as much about the marque that you are buying and have it inspected in person by yourself or someone you can trust. Everyone should know that all old, pre-1976 Porsches and Mercedes rust like mad, especially in the floors, and all old British and Italian sports cars come in a close second when it comes to body panels. Old American cars are much stronger in this department, and also a lot less expensive to repair mechanically.

There is also a question about indicated speedometer mileage on collector cars. I've noticed that when most old Ferraris reach about sixty thousand miles, their speedometers mysteriously run backwards. Be careful, the general rule of thumb is that the more valuable the car, the more chance that someone has "played" with the speedometer. Be aware that it is very easy to turn back the speedometer in any car with an analogue speedometer. Be wary if the numbers don't line up. Unless mileage is verified by dealer-stamped service records, don't believe any unusually low mileage claims. Of course, condition of the car is representative of mileage claims. The condition of the driver's seat, armrest and steering wheel are good indicators of true low mileage.

Unless you are a desperate buyer looking for that rare and unusual vehicle, stay away from eBay. It's a great source for approximate asking prices, though usually high, but don't even think of buying a car on the Internet. There are exceptions to this rule, however. You must have the car, you are impossibly rich or most probably, incredibly stupid.

Love is in the Cards

Since they have been married for 31 years, Amy Zerner and Monte Farber should know a thing or two about love and relationships. What makes their own long-lasting union something even more special is that they've managed to combine their marriage with a working business partnership.

Now the productive artist and writer team is hitting the stands with their 20th spiritual book in time for Valentine's Day. It is aptly called, True Love Tarot – The Lover's Guide to Dating, Mating and Relating. Published by St. Martin's Press, it is available in local bookstores.

The book comes in an attractive, red wrap-around case that flips open to reveal a soft-covered book on one side, and on the other, a beautifully hand-crafted deck of Tarot cards, which have been individually designed by Amy, a renowned artist. Similar to her giant fabric collage paintings which hang on the walls of her East Hampton studio, she has created her new 78-card deck as a romantic tapestry.

There are many reasons for creating their fourth Tarot deck, but it was especially designed to help men and women find help and guidance in their love lives. "In doing thousands of readings, since the 1970s, I have noticed that the one thing people always ask me most is about their love life," said Monte Farber, who is a psychic and an astrologer, with his own column in local papers. "We also see many of our friends having marital problems, or going through divorces or separation, and sometimes they ask us for guidance. We believe the common denominator in most people's problems is poor decision-making skills, so we've combined Amy's award-winning tapestry designs with my words to create a unique line of executive decision-making tools based on intuition-building techniques."

The artistic deck has been in the works for three years and "is designed to help people get in touch with their higher selves, using their own intuition. We all have the answers inside of us, and we really do know, deep inside, what's best for us," says Zerner.

Farber said the True Love Tarot is designed to help people get in touch with that part of themselves that knows what to do. "Lots of times, we don't take the time to sit down and listen to ourselves, and this book is a tool to help people to be quiet and meditate – to have a dialogue with themselves. Then the answers come."

The designs for these one-of-a-kind cards were thought out by Zerner, who has been an artist all her life. Instead of paint, she chose to use scraps of fabrics to design all sizes of tapestries, which also led to the creation of colorful Tarot cards and even artistic clothing, which she calls "Spiritual Couture." Each one of Zerner's Tarot cards is a separate work of art.

Zerner explained that her deck contains four elements – fire, air, earth and water. In using this book set, a person can close his or her eyes, and choose a card, and use the enclosed softcover book to look up the meaning of the card.

"It's also important to know how to ask the right questions, and we give you guidance on how and what to ask, so you get the best and clearest reading," said Zerner. "When you formulate your question, you need to be specific, since you're really talking to the Universe for the right answers. The cards are really a mirror of your soul – they reflect back on wherever you are in your life. You also have to expect results – and not be afraid to get answers to your questions. For example, the cards may tell you it's time to leave a relationship. But it's always for your highest good."

Zerner and Farber credit much of their relationship success to having honed their own intuitive skills from the ancient wisdom they studied before and during their long marriage. They have earned their reputation as the foremost designers of interactive personal guidance systems, also known as "divination systems," or "oracles." Among their 20 books are such titles as The Alchemist, The Oracle of the Goddess, The Enchanted Astrologer, and The Chakra Meditation Kit.

Farber said they have shared their unique brand of life mastery and artistic excellence with others around the world, by selling over two million copies of their works in over nine languages. They have even sold these tools and books on QVC, on the Home Shopping Network, and on New Age Cruises around the Caribbean Islands.

In celebration of Valentine's Day, Amy Zerner and Monte Farber will be doing some more fun demonstrations of their True Love Tarot book and deck set at Bergdorf Goodman, in Manhattan, on February 13 and 14. They will do this in conjunction with selling Zerner's beautiful "Spiritual Couture" jackets at a special trunk show in the store.

For more information on Amy Zerner and Monte Farber's books and artistic projects, check their website at www.TheEnchantedWorld.com.

JUST FOR KIDS

EAST END KID: THE YEAR OF THE DOG

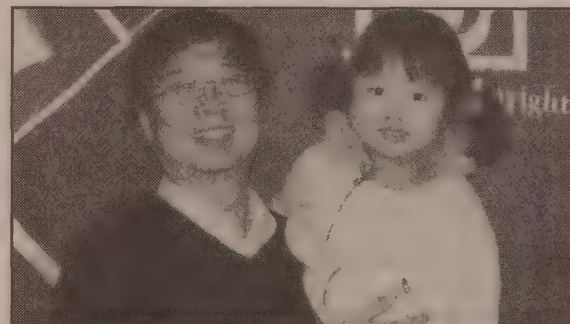

EAST END KID
BY EMILY HART POST
WITH A LITTLE HELP FROM KATLEAN DE MONCHY AND
DAVID POST

I love dogs and I learned that dogs mean prosperity. Maybe Dad will decide to have some prosperity and buy me a puppy. Last Sunday was a special day in Chinatown. First was the New Year's parade and it was so crowded that I had to sit on my dad's shoulders for a pretty long time. He wasn't very happy with the arrangement, but he let me stay up there.

I LOVE dragons. I used to be afraid of them but now they are so much fun to watch as they wind their way down the streets. They were the best part of the parade. After that we went to the Gladney Center New Year's Party at Golden Bridge, a giant sized restaurant on Bowery. There were lots of children from China and their forever parents. The party was fun and there were lots and lots of food and speeches and performances from students from China. And they gave us a cool goody bag. After the party I hailed a taxi on my own – from the sidewalk of course.

Decanters, A Breath of Fresh Air

For those of us who live here on the East End of Long Island – North and South Fork – fine wines have become as much a part of the landscape as potatoes, beaches, and BMWs. Between the many vineyards dotting the North Fork and the select few on the South, we have ourselves quite a nice little region. It's not Bordeaux or Napa, but we're doing all right. With the presence of these vineyards and a community wealthy and sophisticated enough to really appreciate delving into the depths of collecting and consuming fine wines, it's no surprise that locals are learning the rituals of the juice.

Most real enthusiasts find that decanting wine before serving is the right choice. Some argue for the purism of the direct bottle pour, where one can examine the label and enjoy the original vessel, but generally wine drinkers, especially those drinking aged wines, choose to move the red and white into a serving container – the decanter.

As they age, wines deposit sediment. Certain varieties create more than others, but as a rule, decanting helps separate the sediment from the wine. Separation is not the only function of decanting. Even those who aren't experts have probably heard the term "letting wine breathe." This is most commonly associated with heavy reds, and describes the process of introducing air into the wine after what might be many years trapped within a bottle. The air releases the aromas and enhances the flavors, which is why bold reds benefit most from the practice. It tends to smooth out the rough edges. A decanter provides a way to let wine breathe before it reaches the glass. Most of us don't want to wait once a good Medoc is set before us, but the older the wine, the more important it is to decant. The proper serving container will ensure clarity and brilliance by removing deposit. It is suggested that one pour slowly and leave the last ounce of wine within the bottle.

Young wines, too, can benefit from decanting. To replicate part of the aging process that would normally be aided by time, decant the wine a few hours before serving by pouring rapidly, perhaps even upending the bottle. This quick pour and the time in the decanter will let it breathe, which is essential to creating the effects of real age.

Decanters have been around for centuries, and there are hundreds of models available to buy today. Designs extend from the purely utilitarian to the bejeweled and opulently gilded. Some shapes are strange and attention grabbing, but most look the way they do for functional reasons. Your standard decanter tends to be made of fine crystal and has a wide base where the wine can spread out. The neck is much skinnier and usually flares out at the top. This design allows maximum breathing room and the shape helps keep sediment at bay.

The basic decanter looks fabulous on any table and serves its function well, however, there is a wide array of shapes that will please even the most eccentric tastes while serving the intended purpose. The orbital decanter, for example, has a rounded bottom that stands straight up only when placed on its base. Removed from a separate base, the orbital rests on its side on the table and gently rotates, increasing the breathing process without disturbing the liquid within. Other designs include an almost gravy boat shape that boasts an excellent ability to open up young wines to contain overpowering fruit flavors and tannins, while also creating a beautiful presentation. The oval decanter is artistic by nature and has a hole in the middle of its self-described shape. The famous duck decanter is similar to the gravy boat in shape, but reduces drips when pouring. It's a classic decanter inspired by the French chateaux, and is one of many that includes a silver handle, base, and spout.

The decanter is a necessity for any wine enthusiast from the novice to seasoned sommelier. For those of us who live in this burgeoning wine region, we have an opportunity to experience and learn first-hand about this dynamic drink. This is just one tool in an ever-expanding world of paraphernalia and accessories for a limitless hobby. It is, as they say, a start.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Deadly Garden Delight

Those contemptible deer eat just about anything in winter – even plants that are poisonous! How surprised we were to find that yews are not immune to the onslaught of deer! Until we fenced in our garden, the English and Japanese yews looked like sparse sticks with tufts of green. We never suspected they were being eaten by marauding deer. However, when we saw how lush they grew when protected, it became evident. We found this curious since yews are highly toxic. A single mouthful, it is said, will kill a horse.

Despite their toxicity, yews are one of the most desirable, versatile, and resilient foundation and hedge plants. There are about eight species of these plants in the genus Taxus, in the family named Taxaceae. These shrubs or small trees have thin, reddish-brown to purple, scaly bark. They are noted for their dark green needles that are lighter green on the underside. Needles are spirally arranged on alternate branches.

Yews are dioecious. This means that there are separate plants for male or female. Seeds produced on the female plant are partially enclosed within a fleshy, scarlet seed covering called an "aril."

The yews are native to the temperate regions of the Northern Hemisphere and generally grow well in moist soils that have a somewhat neutral pH. They can be grown in either sun or shade, which means they provide versatility for the gardener. They are vigorous plants that tolerate heavy pruning, which can actually rejuvenate older, neglected plants (some that we have cut to the core seem to re-sprout and fill in well over time).

The most commonly seen garden yew is often referred to as the "Japanese yew" (Taxus cuspidata). "English yews" (Taxus baccata) are also quite popular, as are hybrid crosses between the two. The names are often used interchangeably. There are also plants of an entirely different genus (Podocarpus macrophylla) that are commonly referred to as "Japanese yews." Generally, the Taxus group are considered the true yews.

The English yew cultivars are the most popular and most versatile. The English yew is well known for its history and folklore (it is said to make excellent bows).

Yews are commonly used as foundation plants around houses or as hedges. The plants are slow growing, so better as foundation plants than hedges (most people want fast coverage with hedges and yews take years to grow into successful hedges). As foundational plants, their slow growth is desirable since this means less pruning to maintain them successfully.

Yews can be grown in either sun or shade. Their shade tolerance gives landscape designers an important option in challenging areas. They are also quite vigorous; even plants that have been neglected for years, or that have been ripped out of foundation plantings, seem to respond to pruning and/or replanting in new locations.

Some of the more popular yew types include the spreading English yew (Taxus baccata 'Repandens') that grows two to four feet high and about 12 foot wide; the Irish Yew (Taxus baccata 'Fastigiata') that produces a columnar shaped plant of about 15 feet high by four to eight feet wide; the "Emerald Spreader" Japanese yew (Taxus cuspidata 'Monloo') that has a spreading habit and grows about 30 inches high and eight to ten feet wide; and the Taunton yew (Taxus cross 'Tauntonii') that grows to about three feet high and wide.

Yews will grow just about anywhere, provided they have moisture and a neutral pH. If you plant a yew and find that it is not doing well, check the drainage and put some lime around the roots. This typically changes the pH to a more neutral level and improves growth.

The oil derived from yews, taxol, has been used to treat breast and ovarian cancer. However, all parts of the plant are highly toxic, except for the fleshy red berry (though the seed itself is toxic). Dogs and cats typically avoid the plant, but it is important to keep puppies and young children away from the bushes – they sometime will chew on the twigs for fun! The toxin contained in these plants is called taxine, which is a mixture of alkaloids that slows down cardiac conduction. It is almost always deadly. Never allow yew trimmings within reach of horses or other livestock.

Despite its toxicity, the yew is one of the best foundation plants there is! It combines both ease with rich color. We believe it is an excellent garden plant.

Ten Kitchen Island Essentials

When one thinks of the ultimate kitchen, the first things that often come to the homeowner's mind are the range and refrigerator. For people in the kitchen industry, the most important aspect of a kitchen is the practicality and efficiency of the overall layout. The stove, refrigerator and sink make up the working triangle in plan-view, but today we see the island as an essential element around which the working triangle is created.

There are ten things to consider in order to have a functional, versatile and effective island in your kitchen:

Location, location, location. A strategically placed island can solve many problems when it comes to creating efficient workspace. The island can offer a physical and visual separation of the living room, dining room and kitchen, while allowing the cook to be part of the conversation while maintaining a safe and effective workspace.

Size. The size of the island is directly related to the size of the kitchen. An oversized island can make you feel claustrophobic and take away from the rest of the detailed cabinetry. If the island is too small, one might ask why even bother having one at all. Often what decides the size of the island is asking yourself what the island is going to do for the kitchen and what its functions are.

Height. The standard height of kitchen counter-tops is 36 inches and standard bar height is 42 inches. The standard counter height in the rest of the kitchen doesn't apply to the island because portions of the island can be customized to your height or your uses. It is quite common to have a two or three tiered island with a bar area, prep area and a lower area with an oven for baking. Making an island a little higher is a great idea for those of us suffering from lower back pain because then you don't have to lean over quite as much.

Seating. A generous overhang can provide adequate seating with a fantastic view of the cooking process. This is great for families with children that need a little help or monitoring of their homework while dinner is prepared or even if the cook just wants a little bit of company. Pulling up a stool and sitting down to keep the cook company, or even reading the recipe while the cook is preparing a gourmet meal happens in kitchens all over the country now.

Lighting. There are three basic types of kitchen lighting: overall, accent and task lighting. Lighting is essential and can accentuate the island. The lighting over the island can turn it into the focal point of the kitchen. Dimmers can allow you to create a mood within the kitchen from romantic candlelight to operating room brightness.

Storage. More counter-space and more cabinetry results in more storage. One of the most important aspects of an island is the storage space. Pots, baking supplies, counter-top appliances, spices, books, and wine storage all can be accommodated within the design.

Appliances. A cook-top on an island can be a great idea, but is a design detail that many people stay away from, due to the desire to keep the island surface clean. A prep sink can be incredibly useful for a second cook to wash salad, fruits, and vegetables without disturbing the primary cook. The island can also accommodate the piles of dirty dishes after a dinner party, so adding a dishwasher may work for you as well.

Visual barriers. A beautiful island can look like a unique and custom piece of furniture. For somebody who wants to save money but still have a kitchen that knocks their socks off, taking the time to create a special island can be the answer.

Material. An island can contribute to an interest-

Oh, the Things You Can Do with Bamboo

I had just arrived in Bangkok, and was whisked from the airport in a tuk-tuk, which is basically a bench attached to the back of a motorbike. I was clueless as to the layout of Bangkok, and decided to stray from my hotel to explore the city. Aside from the fact that Bangkok in mid-afternoon is no place for a wanderer, due to the extreme heat, my exploration was fruitful. And it began with a discovery that would recur again and again in the ensuing months: bamboo.

I walked along a pungent canal and neared a construction site. But what were the helmet-less workers clinging to as they scaled the side of a four-story building? Scaffolding made of bamboo. It was shocking to me that the same material that I had just enjoyed in my soup was withstanding the weight of ten men. But the fact is, bamboo is one of the most versatile plants in the world. I've found myself seated in a bamboo rainforest, burning a bamboo fire and cooking bamboo in bamboo pots, eating with bamboo utensils and sleeping on bamboo mats, under bamboo shelters. I kid you not. Scaffolding, furniture, garden border, utensil, cooking ingredient: whatever you need, bamboo will serve you.

Now that you know the wonders of bamboo, it's time to discover what exactly bamboo is, and how it can best accommodate you. Bamboo is the common name for a tree-like grass. There are many species of bamboo, all of which grow naturally in tropical regions of Asia and America. One of the most amazing things I noticed about bamboo is the way it grows. It shoots up in clusters and all the stalks are connected by one root system, similar to aspen trees. This is actually a feature of grasses, only in bamboo it is striking because the stalks grow to the height of trees. In Asian forests, some species of bamboo grow up to 120 feet tall! It is these large bamboo specimens that usually end up being used for timber.

In the United States, there are two species of bamboo that grow naturally, though there are plenty that are imported and have been able to adapt to our climate. The primary use of bamboo in this country, unlike in Thailand, is simply ornamental. Bamboo clusters are an excellent substitute for hedges. Depending on your needs, different species are preferable.

ing, diverse palette by mixing and matching with the perimeter cabinetry. Having an island made of a different material from the rest of the kitchen can create a complex and visually rigorous design.

Circulation. The circulation around the island is equally as important as the island itself. A clean flow of movement through the kitchen is critical. Bottlenecks caused by an island's size and location can ruin a kitchen's overall functionality.

Designing the kitchen of your dreams can transform your house into a completely new experience. We all spend so much time and care creating what has become the center of our home-life and who knows, maybe one day we won't even need our living rooms anymore.

For more information on kitchen islands visit Smith River Kitchens in East Hampton (online at www.smithriverkitchens.com) or contact Scott Smith at 631-329-7122.

Two categories of bamboo include running bamboo and clumping bamboo. Running bamboo implies that the plants have roots that shoot out underground, and rise up some distance away from the original clump. This may not be desirable if you are planting bamboo as a lawn border, because you can't know in which direction the bamboo will go, and if you have neighbors, they may not be appreciative of the clump of bamboo stalks that rises in the middle of their Bocce court. Clumping bamboo, on the other hand, is easier to control. It has short rhizomes that remain close to the clump, and the rhizomes that do venture out are not invasive, because they don't create new clumps.

If you're looking to use bamboo on a smaller scale, for strictly decorative purposes, the possibilities are endless. My bedroom recalls the steamy Bangkok nights I left behind with a wide, bamboo curtain. This attractive, durable bark rolls up like a mat to bathe my room in sunlight, and at night it unrolls to shut out anything that might prevent my smooth transition from dreams into daytime. Bamboo shades start at $39 at www.justblinds.com.

In the past decade, bamboo stalks have gained popularity in the United States as a virtually maintenance-free plant. To add a touch of greenery to your home, you can purchase live bamboo plants, put them in a vase of water and watch them thrive. Place stones at the bottom of the vase, and the roots will creep down through the bed of stones. I have a pair of bamboo stalks, and one is trained to grow in a spiral around the other. They sit in a mosaic vase, and they add a natural feel to my bedroom.

To get some bamboo in your life with no effort at all, place an order at the nearest Thai restaurant. Bamboo shoots are very common in Thai cooking. They are young, new canes harvested for food before they are two weeks old. They have a similar texture to asparagus, with the subtle sweetness of corn.

No matter how you look at it, bamboo is a life force. Be it shelter or food, bamboo is one of the most versatile materials in the world.

A Break From Your Breakfast on the Go

Sadly, the modern breakfast consists of a coffee and a toasted bagel from the local deli. Maybe it's a time constraint, maybe it's because we are lazy, but the fact is, there are so many better ways to spend breakfast. And here are the machines to make that happen.

The automatic coffee pot is a brilliant invention. Set the timer like you set your alarm clock and by the time you're out of the shower you've got a steaming pot of coffee awaiting you. That's great if you're a caffeine junky and need a full pot, but what about the folks that just need a cup? Well, Keurig has created four models that brew just one cup of coffee. Others prefer a cappuccino in the morning, so there is also the one cup cappuccino machine out there that does the same thing. If you're one of these people, the Capresso Jura Impressa Z5 Automatic is just the device for you. The modern take on the classic machine is fun and sleek. If you're looking to go a little overboard and own a conversation piece of an espresso machine, try the circa 1950 Eureka Ditta from Genova; Italy, like the Vespa, it's so classic it's hip.

For non coffee drinkers, a nice cup of tea gets the morning started right, but microwaving water just doesn't do the drink justice and boiling a pot of water takes too much of your precious time. The alternative, the electric teakettle, is a better choice. A great one is made by Krups. It holds 54 oz. of water and is wireless, so you don't have to worry about pulling the plug out of the wall and making a mess when you're pouring. And its auto shut-off system will prevent you from burning your house down.

So fine, one of these things will get you your morning dose of caffeine, but what about the toasted bagel? Well, you've got some options. For a simple toaster, visit Kmart. If your looking for something extra, Cuisinart makes a great four-slice toaster that is wide enough for bagels. But if space is a problem in you kitchen, maybe you need the Three-in-One Breakfast Toaster Coffee Machine Egg Boiler. The name says it all. Toast some English muffins, brew a pot of Joe, and even boil four eggs. I know, it sounds a bit mad, but what can I tell you, someone at Aroma is looking out for you. If they could just make a machine that cooks bacon in ten seconds then we'd be set.

Speaking of bacon . . . frying takes too long and despite the delicious smell, it's a mess to clean up. So why not try something a little crazy. Microwave it. I know, the idea sounds horrendous to me as well, but the folks at Bacon Wave have crated a microwavable bacon rack that is supposed to do the breakfast meat justice. If you're going to go the microwave route, there is also a NordicWare Egg Poacher which can cook up to four eggs with no mess. Be wary, the smell of microwaved eggs isn't for everyone.

For the lucky ones that don't have to be up early for work and can take their time, maybe you're looking for something more than the good old breakfast sandwich. If I had the time, I'd eat Belgium Waffles every morning. I'd end up being 300 lbs., but it's a small price to pay for a tasty breakfast. If you're looking for a really good waffle maker look no further than the KitchenAid Pro Line Waffle Baker, exclusively at William-Sonoma. It can bake a 7 1/2 inch diameter waffle in less than six minutes so even if time isn't on your side, you can have a little taste of heaven before heading out to the daily grind.

Hot food for breakfast not your thing? Prefer a nice cold glass of freshly squeezed orange juice? Well, there are a few devices out there that will get the job done. The basic juice press, by Maxam Stainless Steel Juicer, with its sleek stainless steel design is great for anyone with a bit of upper body strength, but if you're really lazy, why not try the Oranfresh OR M5 Elite Window? It does everything for you. Just load it up with oranges and push a button. It's a little on the expensive side, but you can put it next to your espresso machine.

If you're dieting or just one of those folks that likes a little liquid breakfast, the Professional Smoothie Maker by Back to Basics is great. With a built-in pouring spout, you can make your favorite concoctions without having them clump up like they would with a traditional blender.

As for me, I'll take one of each. Now if they could only create an alarm clock that bakes muffins. . .

Let There Be Light

Lighting has a tremendous effect on our moods. And there are many forms of lighting product that can help you achieve the particular feeling you want. Whether you want to establish a romantic atmosphere for your bedroom, or make a room festive for a large gathering, there is the right lighting product to fit the occasion. Today, designing with light has never been easier or more enjoyable. When it comes to lighting your home, the possibilities are limited only by your imagination. There are four categories of lighting that you should keep in mind when developing your particular lighting plan.

Ambient lighting – provides overall illumination and a comfortable level of brightness, and allows you and your guests to see and move around safely.

Task lighting – helps you perform a specific activity, such as reading or playing games, by concentrating light in a particular place.

Accent lighting – creates a mood and adds interest to a room by highlighting or spotlighting certain areas and objects, such as paintings, walls, and collectibles.

Decorative lighting – become elements of the space themselves, such as chandeliers and candles.

When choosing a lighting plan for your dining room, you may want to consider using more than a chandelier or just one fixture.

Try layering with light from a variety of sources to get the most flexibility for creating different moods in the same room. Using dimmers and layering with light allows you to use the bright light you need while setting your table, and then bring the light down when your guests arrive.

To create an elegant dining room setting, blend candlelight and lower levels of electric light sources all over the room. Dim each group of lights separately to create a variety of dining moods. You can use crystal décor bulbs in chandeliers to add sparkle to glasses and dinnerware. Remember that when using low lighting over the dining room table, be careful not to create unbecoming dark shadows on your guests' faces. Placing additional light sources elsewhere in the room helps to balance things out.

Light china cabinets from within, using small halogen or miniature fluorescent bulbs.

Kitchen lighting is important in a utilitarian sense, in that you need to illuminate your workspace so that you can clearly see what you're doing, and to reduce shadows in food preparation areas. Try fluorescent lights under cabinet fixtures and at the edge of your cabinets to create a brightly lit area. Light the sink area by using recessed halogen or fluorescent valance lighting.

For a soft atmosphere, you can conceal fluorescent strip lights above cabinets to provide soft, indirect illumination. This effect works especially well if you place colored decorative glassware above your cabinets.

Consider compact fluorescent down-lights for general lighting to help reduce heat and electric bills. Switch general and task lights separately, and use a dimmer for all halogen lights to create different moods for cooking and entertaining.

When it comes to lighting your bedroom, it's preferable to break the room into several zones by lighting and switching them separately, then adjust accordingly for the mood you want to set. Provide light for reading by choosing swing-arm or flexible bedside lamps. Illuminate artwork over the headboard with ceiling-mounted fixtures placed close to the wall to avoid a direct glare.

For closets, choose energy-efficient, long-life fluorescent bulbs with very good color like designer fluorescent bulbs or compact fluorescent bulbs. Use night-lights to give yourself and your guests the ability to see in the dark in case they need to get up during the night.

In hallways and foyers, try using wall sconces to add a warm, welcoming touch. Washing one side of a hallway with light by using linear fluorescent bulbs in valances or coves will provide wonderful contrasts. In areas with higher, vaulted ceilings (above 8 feet), consider using halogen track lights to highlight photographs and artwork in hallways and entry areas.

Use a torchiere lamp to soften the appearance of the walls and ceiling. In hallways, try placing some fixtures high on walls, directing light downward. This will add drama and a feeling of spaciousness. Using a halogen spotlight, accent an interesting painting, floral arrangement, or piece of furniture at the end of a hallway. It is a good idea to place wall or ceiling-mounted lights and switches at the top and bottom of stairways for safety. Replacing Your Italian Mother with a Pasta Machine

I find that serving homemade fresh pasta impresses company like almost nothing else because people have a sense that the process is more complicated than deciphering the human genome. Before the advent of home pasta machines, this was probably true, and I tip my hat to all those Italian mothers of yesteryear. But I am here to tell you that making fresh pasta is fun and easy, even if a bit time-consuming.

Pasta is nothing more than rolled out dough made from flour and eggs, sometimes with a tiny bit of olive oil. To make the dough, you pour out a large mound of flour, make a well at the top (sort of like a volcano), and place the eggs in the well. Although there is variation in recipes, the ratio is around 3 1/2 cups flour to four or five extra large eggs. The flour is slowly incorporated into the eggs with a fork (keeping the volcano walls intact until the eggs no longer run). Once the dough comes together, it must be kneaded for ten full minutes and then allowed to sit in plastic wrap for 30 minutes. A physicist can explain what is happening to the proteins in the eggs but whatever it is, this process is essential. By the way, you can add tomato paste, squid ink or pepper into the well for different types of pasta, or you can combine cooked, chopped spinach with the eggs before adding them to the well.

Now, enter the pasta machine. There are many pasta machines on the market, but they are really quite similar. Any pasta machine will have two rollers, which can be set at five or six widths. The pasta dough is separated into chunks, and each chunk is fed into the rollers to be flattened out. Light dustings with flour keep the pasta and rollers from sticking. You must feed the pasta through each setting, starting with the widest and working your way down to the narrowest. The very thin, pliable and delicate result is then ready to be cut and cooked.

Most professional chefs will recommend that you buy a metal pasta maker. Beyond that, there is really only one choice to make: electric or manual. The basic manual machine attaches to the counter with a clamp like those you once used in shop class. A crank is inserted at the side of the machine. As you roll the crank, the metal rollers move, allowing the pasta to pass through. This type of basic pasta machine will cost about $50, depending on the cutting attachments, which we will discuss shortly. I find it somewhat satisfying to go through this manual process. It is far less tiring than it may sound, but one can be forgiven for wanting an electric roller.

There are several motor attachments on the market that insert into the pasta machine and rotate the rollers for you. Target, for example, sells such an attachable motor for $79.99. If a total of about $130 (machine and attachment) is too steep, you can buy the Kitchen Aid pasta machine, which is not electric but which attaches to the Stand Mixer, for $99.95. Of course, the Stand Mixer is quite expensive, but if you have one anyway, this might make sense. On the other hand, as I said, manual works just fine for me.

Once you have your pasta machine, you can add cutting attachments. Some pasta machines are sold without any, while others come with one or two basic cutting attachments. In either case, there are plenty of optional attachments on the market that you can buy, ranging from angel hair to spaghetti to lasagna to ravioli. The cutting attachments use the same crank as the rollers. The fully thinned-out pasta is sent through the cutters, and out comes whatever type of pasta you've selected.

Although the number of cutting attachments is dizzying – just take a look at a cooking store like www.cutleryandmore.com – I am quite happy having only the dual-size attachment that came with my pasta machine. While I cannot remember where I got it, it seems to be the same as the Bethany sold by Target for $59.99. The cutting attachment makes spaghetti and fettuccini, both of which are too thin for me to hand cut. I do not own a ravioli or lasagna attachment, as those are relatively easy to hand cut, and I do not like angel hair pasta enough to make it from scratch. (By the way, two ravioli pieces can be fused together, with whatever filling is between them, with just a bit of water around their edges.)

Once the pasta is made and cut, it may be frozen, or else should be cooked as soon as possible. After spending the time to make the pasta, you will be glad to know that fresh pasta takes only about two minutes to cook.

Frame, It's Gonna Live Forever

When making considerations for decorating your home – after the paint and the rugs and the furniture – the coup de grace is what will hang on the walls. The art is not only the finishing touch, but it is often what defines the home and homeowner. The art is what people look at when they visit. It can be a clear measurement of wealth, taste, and personality. The art is important. And like anything of importance, it needs to be simultaneously displayed and protected. That's why we invented the picture frame. Well, that's why maybe the ancient Egyptians invented the picture frame – it's been around at least that long.

The frame does much more for what it contains than many might think. It not only displays and protects, it provides a setting and vernacular from which to experience the piece. The wrong choice can compromise a brilliant image, while an excellent mat and frame with some high-quality glass can give importance to even the most benign object. Imagine for a moment the front panel of your favorite cereal box. Let's say, Count Chocula. If we put that Count Chocula box into a pristine white mat (the border of stiff material placed around a picture) and then place that within a sturdy black, one-inch frame with glare-free glass, seal the back and put a hanging wire on, we now have a piece of Pop art or contemporary ephemera. It's a nod to Duchamp and the Da Da ideology. Put a snow shovel on the wall or sign a urinal and you change the context. You give it significance. Call it art and it's no longer a tool. I'd hang Count Chocula in my house.

You should by now get the point. This is not a suggestion that you begin framing Batman Spaghetti-Os or a carton of Camels. It's a simple demonstration of what a good frame is capable of doing. Picking the right frame for your art, prints, posters, collectibles, and photographs can be a difficult prospect. The challenge is to find what best complements each image without overwhelming it or denying it the dignity it deserves. For fine art and prints, one should always consider the era from which it comes. An Art Nouveau print is best if placed within a frame of the same period, or at least one that replicates the style. If you can't afford one, then pick something unobtrusive. A 19th century gold leaf frame would never look right around a Warhol, but if you were lucky enough to own a William Merritt Chase, you would be making a big mistake not placing it in one of these beautiful frames from the 1800s. The Warhol, on the other hand, would be perfectly suited to a simple black frame and white mat.

Mats are usually the right choice for protecting and adding prominence to a piece of art, but they don't always work. Posters, for example, don't normally require a mat. They are traditionally framed without one, and tend to look best that way. Other works that do better without mats are the ones that feel like objects in and of themselves. A mat covers the outer edge of an image – sometimes only a few millimeters, but it encapsulates the piece. When a piece of art, or your favorite cereal box, has an edge that needs to be seen, one should consider floating the image. Floating means that the paper is hung onto a mat board rather than placed beneath one. Floated images won't have the mat to keep it from pressing directly onto the glass, but this problem can be easily rectified with a shadow box. The shadow box frame sets the object back from the glass by adding more depth.

The choices within these parameters are many, but these basic options are a beginning to exploring the limitless combinations one can discuss with their local framer. Good custom frames can get very expensive, but there are some places one should not cut corners. Always spend the extra few bucks for UV-resistant glass. The sun can be art's worst enemy, and for a relatively low cost the UV glass will prevent fading and damage. If money is an issue, purchase standard inexpensive frames at stores like K-Mart then ask your framer to make a custom mat and replace the glass with UV. Here you can have custom quality at bargain prices. Keep your eyes open for the right frame and you can make anything worth hanging.

Horticultural Alliance of the Hamptons Blooms All Year

The Bridgehampton Community Center stands imposingly at the corner of Main Street and School Street in that town. Tucked away in its basement, with an entrance next to the Fire House garages, is one of the least known and most exciting and active organizations in our area, the Horticultural Alliance of the Hamptons (HAH), and its jewel of a library.

Unlike many other organizations and businesses that fold their tents when the weather gets chilly, HAH continues with a vigorous schedule of programs and lectures, open to the public, on a variety of topics related to the understanding and preservation of our environment, and to the development of home and municipal gardens.

One such program took place late in January, on the deceptively simple subject of conifers; trees and plants with cones. Jim Jeffrey, an expert in this area and a former president of HAH, mounted one of the best organized and most informative lectures I have ever had the pleasure of attending.

Pointing out that new homeowners, without much knowledge of plants and trees, often purchase what seem to be cute little shrubs to plant next to their front doors and in no time find themselves barricaded behind 40-foot giants, Mr. Jeffrey set out to discuss conifers, especially dwarf conifers. He focused on ones that are especially well suited to this area, that have been successfully grown by local gardeners, and that can be used in home landscapes without overpowering the house and grounds.

Mr. Jeffrey had prepared an excellent slide show of about 75 photographs of plants that met those criteria. However, not only did he have the slides, he had gone out to each and every bush and tree, cut a small sample branch (with permission of the owner), mounted that sample on a board along with, if possible, its seed cone, and labeled it with both the Latin and the common name of the specimen. Thus, the 40 or so persons who attended this program could not only see a slide of the specimen in the locale where it was growing but could smell the wonderful piney scents, see the differences in the cones and in the lengths and colors of the needles, and feel the actual textures of each example. This made the information infinitely more meaningful and useful. The time and care that went into the presentation was awesome.

Adding to the value of the program were the comments and observations of the extremely knowledgeable audience, several of whom had contributed some of the specimens and could discuss their experiences with the various plants and trees. Suggestions were made about the care, pruning, moving and feeding of the items under discussion. Topping it off was a display of the books available in the HAH library on the subject.

With the belief that "the garden season never ends," this organization presents at least one program a month, all year, and also sponsors local garden tours in spring and summer, as well as bus trips to the major gardens of various cities in the United States; last year they went to Charleston, South Carolina, and this year trips are planned to Boston, Litchfield County in Connecticut, and the Berkshires in western Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

HAH has a website, www.hahgarden.com, where there is information on membership and links to many other websites of interest. The library, which is open to the public on Saturdays, is fully computerized and you can search their almost 3,000 book and video collection by title, subject, and author on the website, and through links from many local public libraries as well. The monthly newsletter includes much information on local gardening and lists current and upcoming events. Next up on the schedule, on February 12 at 2:00 p.m. is a lecture on English Lake District Gardens by Amagansett's Erika Shank, a founding member of the 20-year-old organization. Following that, on February 18 at 10:00 a.m., is the showing of a time-lapse film, "Nature in Motion," made by another member of HAH, Bill Donnelly. Both these programs are open to the public and refreshments will be served.

Whenever outlanders tell you that there is not much going on in the winter in the Hamptons, tell them they are very wrong (or don't tell them and let them stay home) – that the HAH and its busy schedule of events is just one example of what is on offer here in our winter home.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Happiness may be that you forgot to put your fondue pot in one of your yard sales. Now all you have to do is dust off the pot and light up the sterno – fondue is back! And just in time – Valentine's Day may be the perfect time to restore this dish of the '60s. Think of fondue as the ultimate romantic dinner. It is a dish to dip into together.

Cheese fondue is a classic and delicious with a bubbly mix of Swiss Gruyere and a bit of Appenzeller to add piquancy. While crusty cubes of bread speared onto pronged fondue forks are traditionally dipped into the melted cheese mix, apples slices and blanched vegetables will give variety and substance to the dipping ceremony. For another approach to fondue, thin slices of beef, cut from flank or boneless sirloin, are seared in beef broth and served with a piquant Cumberland sauce. Or you may just opt for a delectable chocolate fondue, swirling luscious strawberries or banana chunks or cubes of buttery pound cake into a pool of meltingly creamy chocolate. I can't wait.

SWISS GRUYERE FONDUE SUPPER

Fondue is traditionally served in a flameproof earthenware pot, but a cast-iron pot with an enameled interior also works. The cheese that crusts in the bottom of the pot is a delicacy to be shared.

Serves 2 to 4

- 1 large clove garlic halved
- 1 cup dry white wine
- 3/4 pound Swiss Gruyere, grated
- 1/4 pound Appenzeller cheese, grated
- 2 tablespoons potato starch
- 2 teaspoons brandy
- Freshly ground pepper and grated nutmeg to taste

For dipping

- Apple slices
- Blanched vegetables of your choice
- Cubes of crusty bread

1. Rub bottom and sides of the fondue pot with the garlic halves. Place over medium heat; add wine, heat to simmer; do not boil.

2. Combine grated cheeses and gradually add to the fondue pot, stirring with a wooden spoon, in a zigzag motion – not circular, to prevent cheese from balling up. Blend the potato starch with the brandy and stir into the cheese mixture, stirring until cheese is melted and creamy. Do not allow to boil. Season to taste with pepper and nutmeg.

3. Set fondue pot over an alcohol (sterno) burner. Adjust heat under the pot so the fondue continues to bubble gently. With pronged fondue forks, spear and swirl above ingredients into the bubbly cheese.

BEEF FONDUE WITH PIQUANT CUMBERLAND SAUCE

Serves 4

- 2 pounds flank steak, thinly sliced
- 1 quart beef broth, preferably homemade or low-sodium

For the Cumberland sauce

- 2 strips orange peel, 1 1/2 inches wide and 3 inches long
- 1 cup currant jelly
- 3 tablespoons dry sherry
- 1/4 cup orange juice
- 2 tablespoons lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon dry mustard
- Pinch cayenne

1. Freeze steak for 20 minutes to half solid for easier slicing. Slice the meat across the grain into 1/8-inch slices. Pour beef broth into an enamel-over-metal pot as distinguished from a flameproof cheese fondue pot.

2. Place the sauce ingredients in the workbowl of a food processor or a blender and process or blend until orange peel is finely chopped, about 10-20 seconds. Pour into a medium saucepan and simmer over low heat, stirring constantly until thickened. Transfer to a sauce bowl.

3. Set pot with beef broth over an alcohol (sterno) burner and simmer broth over low heat. Thread slices through a long bamboo skewer to dip into the hot broth and sear briefly on both sides to desired doneness. Serve with Cumberland sauce.

BITTERSWEET CHOCOLATE FONDUE

Use the best quality chocolate for heaven in a pot!

Serves 2-4

- 1/2 cup Dutch process cocoa
- 1/2 cup plus 2 tablespoons water
- 2 tablespoons light corn syrup
- 3 tablespoons crème fraiche
- 3 ounces bittersweet chocolate, chopped

For dipping

Whole strawberries, banana chunks, apple slices and/or cubed pound cake

1. Sift cocoa into a bowl and set aside.
2. Pour water into a saucepan and add sugar and corn syrup. Stir to mix and simmer over low heat for 7-8 minutes until reduced by one-third. Remove from heat and whisk in the cocoa until smoothly incorporated into the syrup. Whisk in the crème fraiche and return to low heat. Simmer for a few minutes and remove from heat. Stir chopped chocolate into the hot mixture and stir until chocolate is completely melted. Pour into a fondue pot and keep warm over a very low alcohol (sterno) flame. Spear dipping ingredients of your choice on bamboo skewers and swirl into the decadent chocolate fondue.

Perfect Dates For the Perfect Mates

Figuring out what to do with your honey on Valentine's Day can be tough. There are a lot of things to do out there and it isn't easy decide on something to do that is fun, but also special and unique. The Hamptons, however, is designed for this kind of thing. It is the perfect place for romance. All of the ingredients for a magical date are out here, which is one of the reasons why so many people come out in the first place.

We here at Dan's Papers recognize that Valentine's Day is coming and we also have done focus groups and a lot of extensive research so that you can have a Valentine's Day that you will not soon forget. We have selected the top five dates, including a date on a low budget and a date on an extremely high budget. We hope that you enjoy them. Keep in mind that all dates in our recommendation involve giving or receiving flowers at some point. They are written as though you are taking out a woman, but can be applied to a man as well. Maybe skip the jewelry, in that case.

Date # 1: The Smooth Operator Date

Send your date flowers while she is at work, along with a love poem. At the end of the poem, leave a message that tells her to meet you at a restaurant that you have chosen. Make sure that it is a romantic restaurant. Key ingredients to a romantic restaurant are ones that involve candles, low lighting and soft music. Call the restaurant in advance and leave a wrapped gift with the host. Get to the restaurant early and be sure you aren't seen when your date shows up. When your date gets to the restaurant, have the host bring the gift over to your unsuspecting date when she is seated. Make sure that on the note on the gift says "open now." When she opens the gift (jewelry is a good way to go) walk over to the table and say, "Do you mind if I join you?"

Date #2: The Broke As A Joke Date

You got to spend some money at some point, because, again, you are going to have to eat something. But flowers can be picked. Just look around, you'll find them somewhere. Borrow someone's cell phone and call your date to tell her to pick you up. When she arrives, bring her the flowers. Tell her that you want to take her to the library. Just being at the library is free and is totally romantic. Find a book on love and make your date read it. Before she can suggest a restaurant, offer to cook dinner. Buy a package of spaghetti and a jar of marinara. After dinner, offer a foot rub.

Date # 3: The Super Rich Date

Have your personal helicopter pick up one of your many dates from your NYC penthouse. Fly them out to your Sagaponack estate. Have plenty of booze on the helicopter, along with some jewelry. When the chopper lands on your roof, have a staff of ten, no, fifteen masseuses and beauty experts whisk your date onto a massage bed, for a rubdown, a haircut, a facial and waxing. Then have your driver deliver her to a restaurant, where you will be waiting. At the end of dinner, go to East Hampton airport and fly in your personal jet to Brazil for a night of salsa dancing. Fly back in your jet to East Hampton airport, have a driver bring you back to your mansion.

Date #4: The Wine Date

Go to one of the vineyards on the East End and take a tasting tour, then purchase some of the wine. Have a florist deliver flowers to your home. Call a caterer or private chef and have them come to your home and cook you a nice meal. Watch your favorite movie together and fall asleep on the couch.

Date #5: The Exercise Junkie Date

Meet your date at the gym and do an aerobics class together. Afterwards, go out to dinner at your favorite restaurant and order your favorite dessert. Bring flowers with you to the restaurant. Drive together to the ocean and step outside to have a look at the night sky, and then give her a beautifully wrapped gift. Go home and play a board game together.

Lip Service

It's that time of year again; the time when we all have the chance to tell that special someone we love him or her. Telling someone how you feel can be done in many different ways: flowers, cards, little thoughtful tokens, expensive, over-the-top gestures and gifts. But there's one thing that's a constant. No matter who you are and whom you love, whether mother, brother, lover, or friend, the one thing that we all do on Valentine's Day and to express our love is to kiss.

With this in mind, and with V Day just around the corner, it's always good to make sure that your smackers are in tip top working order and in winter, that's no small feat. So, how to keep flaky winter worn lips up to kissability? I spoke with Jodi Pollock, vice president of Barielle, a wonderful beauty line, who told me, "The natural elements in the summer or winter, due to dry air or cold winds, chap lips. Licking your lips will only soothe them momentarily and cause redness and irritation later. Lip products that contain petroleum just sit on top of your lips, so try to use one that is petroleum free."

Barielle has a great product. "A revolutionary Lip Butter that literally melts on your lips to seal in moisture and keep lips protected through the hardest winters or driest summers. It comes in five fat free flavors including Vanilla, Chocolate, Strawberry, Berry Juicy, and Simply Pure." So give them a try. www.barielle.com.

My personal favorite lip replenisher is Clarins Moisture replenishing lip balm. It smells wonderful and feels amazing. You can get it at most department stores, or at www.clarins.com. Clarins also has my favorite lip gloss...it gives the best shine for the perfect pout. It's called Super Glossy Shine. My only caution - like me, you may become addicted to it.

The bee-stung appearance is always thought to be the most appealing and irresistible lip look, but some of us aren't blessed with Angelina Jolie-like smackers. However, there's a new lip plumper on the market that's supposed to work wonders, all without going the "injected" collagen route. Fusion Beauty had improved its old lip plumper and promised extra volume with the new LipFusion XL, $50. For best results, they suggest applying at night and sleeping wearing the product, after which you'll wake to plump, pert and kissable kissers. So, on Feb 13th, apply Lipfusion XL, cross your fingers and hope to wake on V Day with the perfect pout. Find it at www.sephora.com.

All this smooching and lip maintenance is well and good, but it might also interest you to note that kissing is very good for your health, too. Who knew? Kissing relieves tension and so should certainly be done on a regular basis. Kissing helps us to lose weight, too. Honest. "The calories burned depend on the intensity, but in general, one burns about 10 calories for every 10 minutes," says one fitness consultant.

Kissing helps to tone your cheek and jaw muscles - now that's a fun work out. Overall, kissing boosts fitness levels. "Your heart is pumping, your pulse is racing...If kissing is exciting, you release adrenaline into the bloodstream and your heart pumps more blood around your body," according to one physician. Who needs a treadmill? Skip the gym on Feb. 14th and begin a new workout routine.

And here's a good one - kissing actually helps prevent tooth decay! Dr. Peter Gordon, Dental Advisor at the British Dental Association, says, "After eating, your mouth is full of sugar solution and acidic saliva, which cause plaque build up. Kissing is nature's own cleaning process," he adds. "It stimulates saliva flow and brings plaque levels down to normal." Now, I know the Brits aren't known for their dentists, to say the least. But I have had this confirmed by my own American dentist.

Lastly, here are some tips to keep your lips in great working order, as well as smooth as a baby's bottom. There's nothing worse than rough, sore, scaly lips, for the kisser or kissees. So:

Drink plenty of water. It keeps not only the lips, but also the skin hydrated.

Wear lip balm in extreme elements, whether heat or cold.

When exfoliating your face, avoid the lip area.

Be careful what cosmetics you use.....some have drying agents in them.

Try not to lick your lips; it makes any imperfections much worse.

Enjoy the week, and kiss as much as you can. Remember to keep moisturized for optimum effect. But beware of braces and too much lipstick. They might cause messy and awkward situations.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

When browsing East End real estate one should not overlook one of the most secluded and pristinely kept gems the area has to offer, Shelter Island. The island remains largely preserved with hundreds of acres of protected land as well as wetlands and unspoiled, uninhabited shorelines. The island is set between the North and South Forks.

For sale currently on Shelter Island is a unique property in the heart of a 40-acre preserve that juts out on its own private peninsula with 270-degree bay views. This property is truly more about the surroundings than the house itself. The unique 3-bedroom, 3-bath, shingle style cottage on 2.2 acres displays water views from every room. There is 490 feet of white sand beach, a deep-water dock and a two-car garage. There is a waterfront in-ground saltwater pool and a mile long driveway that runs through the preserve. There is a guest cottage, exercise room and indoor exercise pool. A waterside sunroom and patio looks out onto Coecles Harbor. It is listed exclusively with M. Wein Realty Inc. on Shelter Island. Priced at $7 million.

In Montauk, we can now add the Shepherds Neck Motel to the list of commercial sites for sale on the very end of the East End. The Shepherds Neck area is just outside of town. The old inn consists of 60 rooms plus a 20-room motel. It has a restaurant and liquor license as well as two acres of vacant land. This well-known Tudor-style Montauk inn was established in 1928. This is just one of the many old-style structures built in Montauk through the 20s, a style originated there by Montauk Manor developer Carl Fisher. This style represents a period of Montauk history and a building style that has become identifiable both with the area and that time. The property has bay views. It is listed with Brown Harris Stevens at $8,750,000. There are now as many as four Montauk motels on the market including the Memory Motel on Main Street, The Lido, also in town, priced at $2.2 million, and Ruschmeyers Inn, on Fort Pond at $4 million.

The Beebe Windmill, located in Bridgehampton, will soon undergo a $200,000 renovation. The old mill has been worn by the elements, leaving only one of its four sail arms left. Southampton Town plans to restore the site in preparation for the upcoming 350th anniversary celebration in Bridgehampton.

The 1800s Windmill was originally in Sag Harbor on Suffolk Street. It has been moved several times, finally finding its way to its Bridgehampton home.

In Manhattan, a town house has been listed for a record $55 million. The 18,000 sq ft, 25-room, French renaissance style mansion on East 75th was built in the 1800s and is owned by prominent New York banker Jacqui Safra and Jean Doumanian (ex-business partner of Woody Allen). And, believe it or not, even at that price, it may actually need some work. Although, it's not your typical handyman special.

Also in New York, the Drake Hotel has gone to contract for a reported $440 million. The famous Swissotel on Park Avenue that has 70 floors is now in negotiations with the Macklowe Corporation, a major residential & commercial developer.

The existing building holds 495 guest rooms as well as 7,500 sq ft of meeting facilities in addition to a restaurant. There has been speculation that the new owners may tear down the 80-year-old New York landmark and start anew. Macklowe is a mega-developer that has countless projects across the country under its belt, including a complete re-making of a Madison Ave. commercial site that went from a 1920s office space to an ultra modern, state of the art business facility just last year. Some may remember Harry Macklowe, one of the company's principals, from local Hamptons news in the late 90s when border disputes related to his Georgica Close home & neighbor Martha Stewart brought him to East Hampton court.

OUT OF BOUNDS

Dear Dan,

I am very concerned with the President's position on the secret wiretapping of American citizens without a warrant. With the possibility of filing delayed warrants, there is no reason for wiretapping without a warrant. Unfortunately, even with the President's plea of trust me this is just limited to Al Quaida, American freedom can not be left to trust. Over and over our politically powerful have over stepped their boundaries for personal gain. The founding Fathers knew this, and framed the Constitution accordingly.

Both Republicans and Democrats have objected to this secret illegal wiretapping. It is not a partisan issue. Congress did not give the President authority to conduct a secret surveillance plan, and he did not ask their permission. A nonpartisan Congressional Research Service found that the 911 Resolution did not authorize the President's wiretapping program. Let us rigorously go after terrorism, but let us not set up a system that lends itself to political abuse.

RIGHTS, SHMIGHTS

Dear Dan,

Confirming Samuel Alito is a serious threat to our civil rights and freedoms. His support for unchecked executive power from his past support for administration officials who illegally spy on Americans, to his theory of the 'unitary executive' who may detain American citizens without trial or charges undermine our basic rights. A free pass is too dangerous for any executive, particularly so in the name of a "war on terror" when anything goes (translate – any previously held right/liberty/privacy can go). And in the context of Roe v. Wade – Alito demonstrated that he has never changed his earlier convictions – if he's on the bench you can kiss abortion rights goodbye. There are just too many civil rights and freedoms that I've come to enjoy and expect.

I'm proud of our democracy and the judicial system for having conceived and validated them in the first place, I hate to see them all blown away.

CASINOS TAX THE ECONOMY

Dear Dan,

A casino at the EPCAL site will drain the economy, not solve the tax problems of Riverhead. Walk into the communities surrounding Atlantic City. Along with a casino came the need to house about 4000 employees and educate their children, the need for more police and fire, and trash services, increased traffic, higher incidences of DUI, and greater burdens on our water, sewage and power facilities. The "revenues" from the casino will not pay for all of the additional taxes, which will become the burden of the residents of Riverhead.

Remember the promises of the "shell game," known as the Lottery? It was touted as the solution to education costs, but once passed, the miniscule state funds were simply replaced by the lotteries. There are talks of building a new high school to fill the needs of the existing population. Will the 24/7 casino require yet another school?

We have a great need for a coliseum, which could bring sports, concerts, and all sorts of cultural events to the East End. This could bring many jobs to local people and could raise the quality of life for all that live here.

FAST AND FURIOUS

Dear Dan,

Love reading your paper each (and every!) week. I moved to the Springs from the Carolinas about a year-and-a-half ago and I have two questions:

1) What is the deal with the speed limits around here? Take Cedar St. in East Hampton for example. The posted speed limit is 30, but nobody seems to actually drive that slow, anyone who does gets the "psychic push" from the driver behind. I do my best to stick to the limits, but people drive right up to my trunk almost pushing me to go faster. What's the limit that the police let you get away with?

2) According to the big signs on the L.I.E. (and the Driver Handbook given to me prior to getting my N.Y.S. driver license), one must use a "hands-free" contraption to talk on a cell phone. This is the law. I even went out and dropped a twenty on this tangle of wires with an earpiece and microphone only to find that I am the only one who actually pays attention to this law. What is the deal? Can the police pull people over for this offense? I cannot tell you how many times I have almost been hit by some speeding fool on his or her cellular.

Thanks for the response!

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME.....

Dear Dan,

I would like to suggest a correction in your article entitled "Plant the Flag" from the January 13th issue of Dan's Papers.

In this article, you stated: ".....the Shinnecock's, the Mohegan's, the Narragansett's and the Pequots. The Indians, or Native Americans as they prefer to be called..."

Most importantly though was the underlying comedic theme throughout the entire article that the Indians preferred a politically correct term: "Native Americans," and that you would sarcastically adhere to this preference.

"Our 'Native Americans,' and I intend to use this term in quotes for the rest of this article....."

It should be noted that the "Native Americans" do in fact overwhelmingly prefer to be called by their native title (Algonquians, Mohegans, etc.), but for the sake of simplicity, they collectively prefer the term "Indians" to "Native Americans." A quite obvious piece of evidence to this effect would be the chosen name of the quite popular Indian organization, the "American Indian Movement" (AIM). Beyond this, numerous polls and investigative pieces of journalism show that Indians prefer to be called "Indians." The fact is that "Native American" is a politically correct term settled upon by our government and assigned to "Indians" by the white man, or "Americans." It is quite possible that it's a case of pride and stubbornness: ("We don't want your chosen, politically correct term. We want to be called 'Indians.'") Without further speculation as to the reasoning behind their preference, the fact is that it is what they prefer, as anyone could quickly learn by doing a Google search on the matter.

I hope this correction will be included in the next issue of Dan's Papers for the sake of accuracy, honesty, and political correctness.

A religiously faithful reader.

Police Blotter

Cassette Recorder Caper

A man in Hampton Bays was arrested and charged with petit larceny and criminal possession of stolen property in the fifth degree after he stole a cassette recorder from a residence. After aggressive interrogation by police, the man has finally confessed to the crime. He will be prosecuted and his court date has yet to be set. The people of Hampton Bays can now all breathe a sigh of relief that this criminal mastermind is finally off the streets.

Free Beer

A man in Southampton was arrested after drinking two cans of beer inside of the store and then attempting to leave the store without paying for them. A store manager saw that the man had consumed the beers and grabbed the man and then called the police. When the man was apprehended by the manager and told he had to pay for the beer he said, "I thought it was happy hour."

* * *

That's A Big Handbag

A woman in Bridgehampton was arrested after she was caught placing $283 worth of clothing from the discount store T.J. Maxx into her handbag. The woman was apprehended after the attempted theft was filmed on one of the store's video cameras. A scientific investigation is being held by police so that they can try and figure out how this woman managed to fit $283 worth of clothes from T.J. Maxx into a handbag.

* * *

Mailbox Baseball

A couple in East Hampton noticed that somebody smashed their mailbox outside of their home. When the couple examined it closely, they came to the conclusion that the mailbox had been hit by some type of baseball bat. The couple then called the police to alert them that their mailbox had been whacked. Police are looking into whether or not their mailbox looks like a baseball.

* * *

Future Mechanic

A woman in East Hampton called the fire department after her car caught on fire. According to her statement, the car had caught on fire while her son was working on it. Police have advised the woman to encourage her son to pursue a career outside the realm of being a shop mechanic.

* * *

Need To Fish

A man in Montauk reported that eight custom-made fishing rods were stolen from his boat. The rods were located in a boat that had been shrink wrapped for the winter. The total cost of all of the fishing rods was $6,000. Police that are investigating the case have been quoted saying, "Holy guacamole, that is a lot of money for some fishing rods."

* * *

The Paintballer

A woman in Springs reported that $500 worth of damage had been caused to her door at her home. The damage was apparently from red paintballs. When police investigated the incident, they also found that her neighbor's house had been paintballed and received similar damage. Police are in search of a person who likes to "paint the town red."

Is This the Year You Finally Buy Waterfront?

On a clear day from this spectacular Orient sound front location, you can see the light-houses at the mouth of the Connecticut River. Step out of your seaside outdoor shower after a morning run on the beach and enjoy lunch on the bluestone terrace, or head to your water view studio to work on that novel. You won't be disturbed in this exclusive, quiet community of artistic Manhattan professionals. At the end of the day, stretch out in a bluff-top Adirondack chair and watch as sun sinks into the sea, cocktail in hand. Chic, designer Hamptons-style cottage boasts chef's kitchen for entertaining (or not), cherry floors, fireplace, two bedrooms, one-and-a-half tile baths, permit for sound-view Gunite pool in the works and lovely, privet-hedged landscaping. Shy acre and a quarter presents almost limitless possibilities for expansion, and you won't need a variance to build that 6,000 square foot dream house, if that's your thing. If not, enjoy the simple life as is. Pristine, turn-key condition. Welcome home, you've earned it.

Home Owners Panic Prime Jumps, Equity Loans Follow

NY- Over the last few years many have taken out and equity lines due to a low prime rate and banks offering the no closing costs benefit. "Now, it's time to pay the piper" says John Sauro Founder & President of North Atlantic Mortgage Corp. "While it's a good idea to use these loans for short term financing, many obtained them in place of a traditional mortgage. These are not the loan of choice for long term financing."

Why? Because these loans are typically tied to the prime rate and are structured as revolving debt. Much like a credit card.

The Prime rate is now 7.25%.
For most Equity Loans this can mean a total rate of 7.75% to 8.75% or higher and are pushing monthly payments higher. While it may have been a good idea while rates were low, now is the time to cash in on your past savings.

Reposition that debt into traditional type mortgages that still have historically low rates will result in lower monthly payments and faster pay off of the debt.
